With twinkling glaſſes, to betray
The larks that in the meſhes light. Dryden's Horace.

4. An Hour GLASS. A glaſs uſed in meaſuring time by the flux of ſand.

Were my wife's liver
Infected as her life, ſhe would not live
The running of one glaſs. Shakeſ. Winter's Tale.

5. A cup of glaſs uſed to drink in.

To this faſt coſtly treaty,
That ſwallow'd ſo much treaſure, and like a glaſs
Did break i' th' rinſing. Shakeſpeare's Henry VIII.

When thy heart
Dilates with fervent joys, and eager ſoul
Prompts to purſue the ſparkling glaſs, before
'Tis time to ſhun it. Phillips.

6. The quantity of wine uſually contained in a glaſs; a [illegible]

While a man thinks one glaſs more will not make him drunk, that one glaſs hath diſabled him from well diſcerning his preſent condition. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

The firſt glaſs may paſs for health, the ſecond for good-humour, the third for our friends, but the fourth is for our enemies. Temple.

[illegible] glaſſes

Like thoſe who have ſurveyed the moon by glaſſes, I can only tell of a new and ſhining world above us, but not relate the riches and glories of the place. Dryden.

GLASS, adj. Vitreous; made of glaſs.

Get thee glaſs eyes;
And, like a ſcurvy politician, ſeem
To ſee the things thou do'ſt not. Shakeſp. King Lear.

Glaſs bottles are more fit for this ſecond fining than thoſe of wood. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To GLASS, v. n.

Let proof be made of the incorporating of copper or braſs with glaſſmetal. Bacon's Phyſ. Rem.

GLASSWORK, n. ſ. [glaſs and work.] Manufactory of glaſs.

The cryſtalline Venice glaſs is a mixture, in equal portions, of ſtones brought from Pavia, and the aſhes of a weed called kali, gathered in a deſert between Alexandria and Roſetta; and is by the Egyptians uſed firſt for fuel, and then they cruſh [illegible] aſhes into lumps like a ſtone, and ſo ſell them to the Venetians for their glaſs works. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

GLA'SSWORT. n. f. [falicornia, or saltwort]

It hath an apetalous flower, wanting the empalement; for the stamina, or chives, and the embryoes grow on the extreme part of the leaves: these embryoes afterward become pods or bladders, which for the most part contain one seed. The species are two. These plants grow on the sea-coasts in many parts of Europe, and upon the shores in several places of England which are washed every tide with the salt water. The inhabitants, near the sea-coast where these plants grow, cut them up toward the latter end of Summer, when they are fully grown, and, after having dried them in the sun, they burn them for their ashes, which are used in making of glass and soap. These herbs are by the country people called kelp, and are promiscuously gathered for use. From the ashes of these plants is extracted the salt called sal kali, or alkali, much used by the chymists. Miller.

For the fine glass we use the purest of the finest sand, and the ashes of chali or glasswort; and for the coarser or green sort, the ashes of brake or other plants. Brown's Vulgar Errours

GLA'SSY, adj. [from glass.]

GLEAM. n. f. [gehoma, Saxon.] Sudden shoot of light; [illegible]

Then was the fair Dodonian tree far seen
Upon seven hills to spread his gladsome gleam;
And conquerors bedecked with his green,
Along the banks of the Ausonian stream. Spenser.

At last a gleam
Of dawning light turn'd thitherward in haste
His travell'd steps. Milton's Paradise Lost, b.

As I bent down to look just opposite,
A shape within the wat'ry gleam appear'd,
Bending to look on me. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv.

Mine is a gleam of bliss, too hot to last,
Wat'ry it shines, and will soon o'ercast. Dryd. Aurengz.

We ken them from afar; the setting sun
Plays on their shining arms and burnish'd helmets,
And covers all the field with gleams of fire. Addison's Cato.

In the clear azure gleam the flocks are seen,
And floating forests paint the waves with green. Pope

Nought was seen, and nought was heard,
Around the dreary coast,
But dreadful gleams,
Fires that glow,
Shrieks of woe. Pope's St Cecilia

To GLEAM. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shine with sudden coruscation

Observant of approaching day,
The meek-ey'd morn appears, mother of dews,
At first faint gleaming in the dappled East. Thomf. Summer.

Ye gleamings of departed peace
Shine out your last. Thomson's Sp.

2. To shine.

On each hand the gushing waters play,
And down the rough cascade white dashing fall,
Or gleam in lengthen'd vista's through the trees. Thomson.

GLE'AMY adj. [from gleam.] Flashing; darting sudden coruscations of light.

In brazen arms, that cast a gleamy ray,
Swift through the town the warriour bends his way Pope.

So much as from occasions you may glean,
If aught, to us unknown, afflicts him thus. Shakesp. Hamlet.

That goodness
Of gleaning all the land's wealth into one,
Into your own hands, card'nal, by extortion. Shak. H. VIII.

They gleaned of them in the highways five thousand men. Judg xx. 45.

But Argive chiefs, and Agamemnon's train,
When his refulgent arms flash'd through the shady plain,
Fled from his well-known face with wonted fear,
And [illegible] sword and spear
Drove headlong to their ships, and glean'd the routed rear Dryden's Æn. b. vi.

In the knowledge of bodies we must be content to glean what we can from particular experiments; since we cannot, from a discovery of their real essences, grasp at a time whole sheaves, and in bundles comprehend the nature and properties of whole species together. Locke.

GLEAN. n. f. [from the verb.] Collection made laboriously by slow degrees.

Plains, meads, and orchards all the day he plies;
The gleans of yellow thyme distend his thighs
He spoils the saffron. Dryden's Virg. Georg. b. iv.

GLE'ANER. n. f. [from glean.]

1. One who gathers after the reapers.

For still the world prevail'd, and its dread laugh,
Which scarce the firm philosopher can scorn,
Should his heart own a gleaner in the field. Thomf. Aut.

2. One who gathers any thing slowly and laboriously

An ordinary coffee-house gleaner of the city is an arrant statesman, and as much superior to him, as a man conversant about the court is to a shopkeeper. Locke

GLE'ANING. n. f. [from glean.] The act of gleaning, or thing gleaned

There shall be as the shaking of an olive-tree, and as the gleaning of grapes when the vintage is done. Bible.

The orphan and widow are members of the same common family, and have a right to be supported out of the incomes of it, as the poor Jews had to gather the gleanings of the rich man's harvest. Atterbury's Sermons.

GLEBE. n. f. [gleba, Latin.]

1. Turf; soil, ground.

Fertile of corn the glebe, of oil and wine,
With herds the pastures thronged, with flocks the hills Milt.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood,
If odrous blooms the bearing branches load,
The glebe will answer to the sylvan reign,
Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain. Dryden.

Sleeping

Sleeping vegetables lie,
'Till the glad summons of a genial ray
Unbinds the glebe, and calls them out to day. Garth

2 The land possessed as part of the revenue of an ecclesiastical benefice.

The ordinary living or revenue of a parsonage is of three sorts, the one in land, commonly called the glebe, another in tythe, which is a set part of our goods rendered to God; the third, in other offerings bestowed upon God and his church by the people. Spelman.

A trespass done on a parson's glebe land, which is a freehold, cannot be tried in a spiritual court. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Many parishes have not an inch of glebe. Swift.

GLE'BOUS. adj. [from glebe.] Turfy. Dict.

GLE'BY. adj. [from glebe.] Turfy, perhaps in the following passage fat or fruitful, if it has indeed any meaning.

Pernicious flatt'ry! thy malignant seeds
In an ill hour, and by a fatal hand
Sadly diffus'd o'er virtue's gleby land,
With rising pride amidst the corn appear,
And choke the hopes and harvest of the year. Dryden.

GLEDE. n. s. [gleaza, Saxon.] A kite.

Ye shall not eat the glede, the kite, and the vulture. Deutr.

GLEE n. s. [glizze, Saxon.] Joy, merriment, gayety. It anciently signified musick played at feasts. It is not now used, except in ludicrous writing, or with some mixture of irony and contempt.

She marcheth home, and by her takes the knight,
Whom all the people follow with great glee. Fairy Queen.

Many wayfarers make themselves glee, by putting the inhabitants in mind of their privilege, who again foreslow not to baigne them with perfume. Carew's Survey of Cornwal.

And his sportive limbs,
This way and that convolv'd, in friskful glee
Their frolicks play Thomson's Spring.

GLIB. adj. [from λείβω. Skinner.]

1. Smooth, slippery; so formed as to be easily moved.

Liquid bodies have nothing to sustain their parts, nor any thing to cement them; the parts being glib and continually in motion, fall off from one another, which way soever gravity inclines them. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

Habbakkuk brought him a smooth strong rope, compactly twisted together, with a noose that slipt as glib as a birdcatcher's gin. Arbuthnot.

2. Smooth; volubie.

I want that glib and oily art
To speak and purpose not, since what I well intend,
I'll do't before I speak. Shakespeare's King Lear.

There was never so much glib nonsense put together in well sounding English. Locke.

Now Curl his shop from rubbish drains;
Three genuine tomes of Swift's remains:
And then, to make them pass the glib,
Revis'd by Tibbald, Moore, and Cibber. Swift.
Be sure he's a fine spoken man;
Do but hear on the clergy how glib his tongue ran. Swift.

GLIB n. s.

They have another custom from the Scythians, the wearing of mantles and long glibs; which is a thick curled bush or hair hanging down over their eyes, and monstrously disguising them. Spenser on Ireland.

To GLIB. v. a. [from the adjective.] To castrate.

I'll geld them all fourteen they shall not see,
To bring false generations; they are cohiers,
And I had rather glib myself than they Should not produce fair issue. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

GLI'BLY. adv. [from glib.] Smoothly, volubly.

Many who would startle at an oath, whose stomachs as well as consciences recoil at an obscenity, do yet slide glibly into a detraction. Government of the Tongue.

GLI'BNESS. n. s. [from glib.] Smoothness; slipperiness.

A polish'd ice-like glibness doth enfold
The rock. Chapman's Odyssey.

The tongue is the most ready for motion of any member, needs not so much as the flexure of a joint, and by access of humours acquires a glibness too, the more to facilitate its moving. Government of the Tongue.

To GLI'DE. v. n. [gleoan, Saxon; glijden, Dutch.]

1. To flow gently and silently.

By East, among the dusky vallies, glide
The silver streams of Jordan's crystal flood. Fairfax, b. iii.

Glide under the green wave. Milton.

He trembl'd every limb, and felt a smart
As if cold steel had glided through his heart. Dryd. Fables.

All things are beheld as in a hasty motion, where the objects only glide before the eye and disappear. Dryden.

GLIDE. n. s. [from the verb.] Lapse; act or manner of passing smoothly.

About his neck
A green and guided snake had wreath'd itself,
Who, with her head nimble in threats, approach'd
The opening of his mouth; but suddenly
Seeing Orlando it unlink'd itself,
And with indented glides did slip away
Into a bush. Shakespeare's As you like it.

GLI'DER. n. s. [from glide.] One that glides.

The glaunce into my heart did glide,
Hey ho the glider,
Therewith my soul was sharply gride,
Such wounds soon waxen wider. Spenser's Pastoral.

1. To shine faintly.

The West yet glimmers with some streaks of day. Shakes.

The truth appears so naked on my side,
That any purblind eye may find it out.
—And on my side it is so well apparel'd,
So clear, so shining, and so evident,
That it will glimmer through a blind man's eye. Shakespeare.

Oft in glimmering bowers and glades
He met her. Milton.

See'ſt thou yon' dreary [illegible]
The ſeat of deſolation, void of light,
Save what the glimmering of theſe livid flames
Caſts pale and dreadful? Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. i.
The ſacred influence
Of light appears, and from the walls of heav'n
Shoots far into the boſom of dim night
A glimmering dawn. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. ii.
Through theſe ſad ſhades this chaos in my ſoul,
Some ſeeds of light at length began to roll;
The riſing motion of an infant ray
Shot glimm'ring through the cloud, and promis'd day. Prior.
Oft by the winds, extinct the ſignal lies;
Or ſmother'd in the glimm'ring ſocket dies. Gay's Trivia.
When roſy morning glimmer'd o'er the dales,
He drove to paſture all the luſty males. Pope's Odyſſey

2. To be perceived imperfectly; to appear faintly
On the way the baggage puſh-boy, who had been at court, got a glimmering who they were. Wotton

GLI'MMER n. ſ. [from the verb]
1. Faint ſplendour, weak light.
2. A kind of foſſil
The leſſer maſſes that are lodged in ſparry and ſtony bodies diſperſedly, from their ſhining and glimmering, were an inducement to the writers of foſſils to give thoſe bodies the name of mica and glimmer. Woodward on Foſſils.
Stones which are compoſed of plates, that are generally plain and parallel, and that are flexible and elaſtick: talc, catſilver, or glimmer, of which there are three ſorts, the yellow or golden, the white or ſilvery, and the black. Woodward.

GLIMPSE n. ſ. [glimmen, Dutch, to glow]
1. A weak faint light.
Such vaſt room in nature,
Only to ſhine, yet ſcarce to contribute
Each orb a glimpſe of light, conveyed ſo far
Down to this habitable, which returns
Light back to them. Milt. Par. Loſt
Thouſands of things, which now either wholly eſcape our apprehenſions, or, which our ſhortſighted reaſon having got ſome faint glimpſe of, we, in the dark, grope after. Locke.
2. A quick flaſhing light
Light as the lightning glimpſe they ran? Milton's P. Loſt.
My thoughtleſs youth was wing'd with vain deſires;
My manhood, long miſled by wand'ring fires,
Followed falſe lights; and when their glimpſe was gone,
My pride ſtruck out new ſparkles of her own. Dryden.
3. Tranſitory luſtre.
If I, celeſtial fire, in aught
Have ſerv'd thy will, or gratified thy thought,
One glimpſe of glory to my ſlave give;
Grac'd for the little time he has to live. Dryd. Fables.
4. Short fleeting enjoyment.
If, while this weary'd fleſh draws fleeting breath,
Not ſatisfy'd with life, afraid of death,
If haply be thy will that I ſhould know
Glimpſe of delight, or pauſe from anxious woe;
From now, from inſtant now, great ſire, diſpel
The clouds that preſs my ſoul. Prior
5. A ſhort tranſitory view.
O friends! I hear the tread of nimble feet
Haſting this way, and now by glimpſe diſcern
[illegible] Milt. P. Loſt

Art thou that traytor angel? Milton's Paradise Lost, b.

Always, whilst he is young, be sure to preserve his tender mind from all impressions and notions of spirits and goblins, or any fearful apprehensions in the dark. Locke.

2. A fairy, an elf.

Sir Isenbras was Ethel, who overcame
The wicked goblins in bloody field,
But Elfant was of most renowned fame,
Who of all crystal did Panthea build. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

Go, charge my goblins that they grind their joints
With dry convulsions, shorten up their sinews
With aged cramps. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Mean time the village rouzes up the fire,
While well attested, and as well believ'd,
Heard foreman goes the goblin story round. Thomson's Winter.

GOD. n. s. [θεος, Saxon, which likewise signifies good. The same word passes in both senses with only accidental variations through all the Teutonick dialects.]

1. The Supreme Being.

God is a spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth. John iv. 24.

God above
Deal between thee and me! for ever now
I put myself to thy direction. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The Supreme Being, whom we call God, is necessary, self-existent, eternal, immense, omnipotent, omniscient, and best being, and therefore also a being who is and ought to be esteemed most sacred or holy. Grew's Cosmol. Sacr. b. i.

2. A false god, an idol.

He that sacrificeth unto any god, save unto the Lord only, he shall be utterly destroyed. Exod. xxii. 20.

As flies to wanton boys are we to the gods,
They kill us for their sport. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Strong god of arms, whose iron sceptre sways
The freezing North, and Hyperborean seas,
And Scythian colds, and Thracia's Winter coast,
Where stand thy steeds, and thou art honour'd most. Dryd.

3. Any person or thing deified or too much honoured.

Whose end is destruction, whose god is their belly. Phil. iii.

I am not Lucio,
Nor a musician as I seem to be,
But one that scorns to live in this disguise,
For such a one as leaves a gentleman,
And makes a god of such a cushion. Shakespeare.

To GOD v. a. [from the noun.] To deify; to exalt to divine honours.

This last old man,
Lov'd me above the measure of a father;
Nay, godded me, indeed. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

How you should bid godyeld us for your pains,
And thank us for your trouble. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

GOEL. adj. [golen, Saxon] Yellow. An old word.

In March at the furthest, dry season or wet,
Hop-roots so well chosen let skilful go set;
The goeler and younger, the better I love;
Well gutted and pared, the better they prove. Tusser. Husb.

GO'ER. n. s. [from go]

1. One that goes, a runner

I would they were in Africk both together,
Myself by with a needle, that I might prick
The goer back. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Such a man
Might be a copy to these younger times;
Which, follow'd well, would now demonstrate them
But goers backward. Shakesp. All's well that ends well.

Nothing could hurt either of us so much as the intervening officious impertinence of those goers between us, who in England pretend to intimacies with you, and in Ireland to intimacies with me. Pope to Swift.

That going shall be used with feet. Shakesp. King Lear.

2. Progress

The time of death has a far greater latitude than that of our birth, most women coming, according to their reckoning, within the compass of a fortnight; that is, the twentieth part of their going. Grew's Cosmol. Sacr. b.

3. Departure

Thy going is not lonely; with thee goes
Thy husband, him to follow thou art bound. Milt P Lost.

GOLA. n. s. The same with CYMATIUM, which see.

In a cornice the gola, or cymatium of the corona, the coping, the modillons or dentels, make a noble show. Spect.

GOLD. n. s. [gole, Saxon, galud, riches, Welsh. It is called geld in our English tongue either of geel, as Scaliger says, which is in Dutch to shine, or of another Dutch word, which is gelten, and signifies in Latin valere, in English to be of price or value. hence cometh their ordinary word gelt, for money Peacham on Drawing.]

1. Gold is the heaviest, the most dense, the most simple, the most ductile, and most fixed of all bodies; not to be injured either by air or fire, and seeming incorruptible. It is found by means of sea-salt; but is injured by no other salt, and is most easily of all metals amalgamated with silver. Gold is frequently found native, and very rarely in a state of ore. It never constitutes a peculiar ore, but is found most frequently among ore of silver. Native gold is seldom found pure, but has almost constantly silver with it, and very frequently copper. Gold dust, or native gold, in small masses, is mixed among the sand of rivers in many parts of the world. It is found, in the greatest abundance, bedded in masses of hard stone, often at the depth of a hundred and fifty fathoms in the mines of Peru. Pure gold is so fixed, that Boerhaave informs us of an ounce of it set in the eye of a glass furnace for two months, without losing a single grain. Hill on Fossils.

Gold hath these natures: greatness of weight, closeness of parts, fixation, pliantness or softness, immunity from rust, and the colour or tincture of yellow. Bacon's Nat. History.

Ah! Buckingham, now do I ply the touch,
To try if thou be current gold indeed. Shakesp. Rich. III.

We commonly take shape and colour for so presumptive ideas of several species, that, in a good picture, we readily say this is gold, and that a silver goblet, only by the different figures and colours represented to the eye by the pencil Locke.

The gold fraught vessel, which mad tempests beat,
He sees now vainly make to his retreat. Dryd Tyran. Love.

2. Money.

For me, the gold of France did not seduce,
Although I did admit it as a motive
The sooner to effect what I intended. Shakesp. Henry V.

Thou, that so stoutly hast refused me,
Give me thy gold, if thou hast any gold,
For I have bought it with an hundred blows. Shakesp. H. VI.

If I want gold, steal but a beggar's dog,
And give it Timon, why, the dog coins gold. Shakespeare.

3. It is used for any thing pleasing or valuable. So among the ancients χρυσῆ ἀφροδίτη; and animamque, marisque aureos educit in astra. Horace.

The king's a bawcock, and a heart of gold,
A lad of life, an imp of fame. Shakespeare's Henry V.

GOLD of Pleasure. n. s. [myagrum,

GRANGE. n. ſ. [grange, French.] A farm: generally a farm with a houſe at a diſtance from neighbours.

One, when he had got the inheritance of an unlucky old grange, would needs ſell it; and, to draw buyers, proclaimed the virtues of it: nothing ever thrived on it, ſaith he; the trees were all blaſted, the ſwine died of the meaſles, the cattle of the murrain, and the ſheep of the rot; nothing was ever reared there, not a duckling or a gooſe. Ben. Jonſon's Diſcov.

At the moated grange reſides this dejected Mariana. Shakeſ.

The looſe unletter'd hinds,
When for their teeming flocks and granges full
In wanton dance they praiſe the bounteous Pan. Milton.

If the church was of their own foundation, they might chuſe, the incumbent being once dead, whether they would put any other therein, unleſs, perhaps, the ſaid church had people belonging to it, for then they muſt ſtill maintain a curate: and of this ſort were their granges and priories. Ayliffe.

GRA'NITE. n. ſ. [granit, Fr. from granum, Lat. becauſe conſiſting as it were of grains, or ſmall diſtinct particles.] A ſtone compoſed of ſeparate and very large concretions, rudely compacted together; of great hardneſs, giving fire with ſteel, not fermenting with acids, and imperfectly calcinable in a great fire. The hard white granite with black ſpots, commonly called moor-ſtone, forms a very firm, and though rude, yet beautifully variegated maſs. It is found in immenſe ſtrata in Ireland, but not uſed there. In Cornwal and the adjacent counties it is found on the ſurface of the earth in prodigious maſſes, and brought in great quantities to London, where it is uſed for the ſteps of publick buildings. Hard red granite, variegated with black and white, now called oriental granite, is valuable for its extreme hardneſs and beauty, and capable of a moſt elegant poliſh. It is common in Egypt and Arabia, and is alſo found in the Weſt of England little inferiour. The vulgar opinion of their being caſt out of various fragments of marble, becauſe they appear compoſed of particles or granules of different colours, is eaſily confuted by an accurate inſpection of the ſtructure and formation of thoſe granules, the leaſt and meaneſt of which no human art could ever compoſe, nor ſhe leave in the ſtate in which we ſee them. A third ſort of granite has a beautiful variegation of colours, red, white, black and yellow, and capable [illegible] the inferiour in beauty to the ori[illegible], [illegible] mense ſtrata of it in Minorca. Detached nodules of it, two or three foot in circumference, are alſo frequent on the ſhores of Guernſey, from whence it is brought as baſtaſt, and uſed in paving our ſtreets. Hill on Foſſils.

Alabaſter, marble of divers colours, both ſimple and mixed, the opalites, porphyry, and the granite. Woodward.

There are ſtill great pillars of granite, and other fragments of this ancient temple. Addiſon on Italy.

GRANIVOROUS. adj. [granum and vore, Lat.] Eating grain; living upon grain.

Granivorous birds, as a crane, upon the firſt peck of their bills, can diſtinguiſh the qualities of hard bodies, which the ſenſe of men diſcerns not without maſtication. Brown.

Panick affords a ſoft demulcent nouriſhment, both for granivorous birds and mankind. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

GRANNAM. n. ſ. [for grandam.] Grandmother. Only uſed in burleſque works.

Oft my kind grannam told me, Tim, take warning. Gay.

2. The instrument of grinding.

His heart a solid rock, to fear unknown,
And harder than the grinder's nether stone. Sandys.

Now exhort
Thy hinds to exercise the pointed steel
On the hard rock, and give a wheely form
To the expected grinder. Phillips

3. [Dens-molaris.] The back teeth; the double teeth.

The teeth are in men of three kinds, sharp, as the foreteeth; broad, as the back-teeth, which we call the molar-teeth, or grinders; and pointed teeth, or canine, which are between both. Bacon's Natural History.

He the raging lioness confounds,
The roaring lion with his javelin wounds;
Scatters their whelps, their grinders breaks; so they
With the old hunter starve for want of prey Sandys.

The jaw-teeth or grinders, in Latin molares, are made flat and broad at top, and withal somewhat uneven and rugged, that, by their knobs and little cavities, they may the better retain, grind and commix the aliments. Ray on the Creation.

Nature is at a great deal of labour to transmute vegetable into animal substances; therefore herb-eating animals, which don't ruminate, have strong grinders, and chew much. Arbuth.

4. The teeth, in irony or contempt.

One, who at sight of supper, open'd wide
His jaws before, and whetted grinders try'd. Dryd. Juven.

Unlucky Welshed! thy unfeeling master,
The more thou tak'st, gripes his hand the faster. Pope.

4. To pinch, to press, to squeeze.

And first the dame came rushing through the wood,
And next the famish'd hounds that fought their food,
And grip'd her flanks, and oft essay'd their jaws in blood
Dryden's Fables.

To GRIPE. v. n. To pinch the belly, to give the colick.

Thus full of counsel to the den she went,
Grip'd all the way, and longing for a vent. Dryden.

Many people would, with reason, prefer the griping of an hungry belly to those dishes which are a feast to others. Locke.

Manna, by the bulk, figure, texture and motion of its parts, has a power to produce the sensations of sickness, and sometimes of acute pains or gripings in us. Locke.

GRIPE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Grasp; hold; fetsure of the hand or paw.

Therefore full on high
He over him did hold his cruel claws,
Threatning with greedy gripe to do him dy. Fairy Queen.

They put a barren sceptre in my gripe,
Thence to be wrench'd with an unlineal hand. Shak. Macb.

Should I
Suffer with lips, as common as the stairs
That mount the Capitol; join gripes with hands
Made hardy with hourly falsehood as with labour. Shakesp.

He gave me his hand,
And, with a feeble gripe, says, dear, my lord,
Command my service. Shakespeare's Henry V.

I felt; and with my weight the helm constrain'd,
Was drawn along, which yet my gripe retain'd. Dryd. Æn.

2. Squeeze, pressure.

Fir'd with this thought, at once he strain'd the breast;
'Tis true, the harden'd breast resists the gripe,
And the cold lips return a kiss unripe. Dryden's Fables.

3. Oppression; crushing power.

I take my cause
Out of the gripes of cruel men, and give it
To a most noble judge, the king my master. Shak. H VIII.

4. Affliction; pinching distress.

Adam, at the news
Heart-struck with chilling gripe of sorrow stood,
That all his senses bound! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

Can'st thou bear cold and hunger? Can these limbs,
Fram'd for the tender offices of love,
Endure the bitter gripes of smarting poverty? Otway.

5. [In the plural.] Belly-ach; colick.

In the jaundice the choler is wanting, and the identical have a great fourness and gripes, with windiness. Floyer.

Disordered hung about his shoulders round. Fairy Queen.
Where I was wont to seek the honey bee,
The grisly toadstool grown there might I see. Spenser.
My grisly countenance made others fly,
None dare come near, for fear of sudden death Sh. H VI.
Back flep'd those two fair angels, half amaz'd
So sudden to behold the grisly king,
Yet thus, unmov'd with fear, accost him soon. Milt. P. L.
For that damn'd magician, let him be girt
With all the grisly legions that troop
Under the sooty flag of Acheron. Milton.
The beauteous form of fight
Is chang'd, and war appears a grisly sight. Dryden's Fables
In vision thou shalt see his grisly face,
Hovering of terrors, raging in thy race. Dryd. Innocence.
Thus the grisly spectre spoke again. Dryden's Fables.
Close by each other laid, they press'd the ground,
Their manly bosoms pierc'd with many a grisly wound.
Dryden's Fables.
So rushes on his foe the grisly bear.

GRIST n. f. [gyrſt, Saxon.]

1. Corn to be ground
Get grist to the mill to have plenty in store,
Lest water lack water Tusser's Husbandry.
A mighty trade this lusty miller drove;
Much grist from Cambridge to his lot did throve,
And all the corn they us'd at scholars-hall. Author of Troop.
2. Supply, provision
Matter, as wise log clans say,
Cannot without a form subsist,
And form, say I, as well as they,
Must fail, if matter brings no grist. Swift
3. GRIST to Mill, is profit, gain.
The computation of degrees, in all matrimonial causes, is wont to be made according to the rules of that law, because it brings grist to the mill. Ayliffe's Parergon.

GRI'STLE. n. f. [gpiſtle, Saxon.] A cartilage; a part of the body next in hardness to a bone.
Not living creatures, that have shells very hard, as oysters, crabs, lobsters, and especially the tortoise, have no bones within them, but only little gristles. Bacon's Nat. History
Lest the asperity or hardness of these cartilages should hurt the œsophagus or gullet, which is tender and of a skinny substance, or hinder the swallowing of our meat, therefore these annulary gristles are not made round, or intire circles; but where the gullet touches the windpipe, there, to fill up the circle, is only a soft membrane, which may easily give way to the distention of the gullet. Ray on the Creation

GRI'STLY. adj. [from gristle] Cartilaginous, made of gristle.
At last they spit out pieces of their lungs, it may be small gristly bits, that are eaten off from the lung-pipes. Harvey.
She has made the back-bone of several vertebræ, as being more fit to bend, more tough, and less in danger of breaking, than if they were all one intire bone without these gristly junctures. Ward's Antidote against Atheism.
Fins are made of gristly spokes, or rays connected by membranes; so that they may be contracted or extended like womens fans. Ray on the Creation.
They have a louder and stronger note than other birds of the same bigness, which have only a gristly windpipe. Grew.
Each pipe, distinguish'd by its gristly rings,
To cherish life aerial pasture brings. Blackmore's Creation.

GRIT. n. f. [gpytta, greot, Saxon.]

1. The coarse part of meal.
2. Oats husked, or coarsely ground.
3. Sand, rough hard particles
Silesian bole, crackling a little betwixt the teeth, yet without the least particle of grit, feels as smooth as Castile soap.
Grew's Musæum.
The fleecy pear-tree here
Will rise luxuriant, and with toughest root
Pierce the obstructing grit and restive marle Phillips.
4. Grits are fossils found in minute masses, forming together a kind of powder, the several particles of which are of no determinate shape, but seem the rudely broken fragments of larger masses; not to be dissolved or disunited by water, but retaining their figure, and not cohering into a mass. They are opake, and in many species fermenting with acids, and often soured with heterogene matters. One sort is a fine, dull looking, grey grit, which, if wetted with salt-water into mortar or paste, dries almost immediately, and coalesces into a hard stony mass, such as is not easily afterwards dissolved by water. This is the pulvis puteolanus of the ancients, mixed among their cements used in buildings sunk into the sea; and in France and Italy an ingredient in their harder plasters, under the name of pozzolane. It is common on the sides of hills in Italy. Another species, which is a coarse, beautifully green, dull grit, is the chrysocolla of the ancients, which they used in soldering gold, long supposed a lost fossil. It serves the purpose of soldering metals better than borax, and may be had for carriage from the shores of New England. The ferruginous black guttering grit, is the black sand employed to throw over writings, found on the shores of Italy. What is commonly used in London is from Genoa. The coarse, guttering, brown ish black is nearly of the same nature, but inferior, in all respects. Hill on Fossils.

GRITTINESS. n. f [from gritty] Sandiness, the quality of abounding in grit.
In fullers-earth he could find no sand by the microscope, nor any grittiness. Mortimer's Husbandry.

GRI'TTY. adj. [from grit] Full of hard particles; consisting of grit.
I could not discern the unevenness of the surface of the powder, nor the little shadows let fall from the gritty particles thereof. Newton's Opt.

GRIZELIN. adj. [More properly griseum. See GRIDELIN]
The Burgundy, which is a grizelin or pale red, of all others, is surest to ripen in our climate. Temple.

GRI'ZZLE. n. f [from gris, gray; grisaille, French.] A mixture of white and black; gray.
O thou o'ersembling cub! what wit thou be,
When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy face? Shakespeare.

GRI'ZZLED. adj. [from grizzle] Interspersed with gray.
To the boy Cæsar, send this grizzled head. Shakespeare
His beard was grizzled—no.
—It was as I have seen it in his life. Shakesp. Hamlet.
His hair just grizzled,
As in a green old age. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.
Those grizzled locks, which nature did provide
In plenteous growth, their asses ears to hide. Dryd. Juven.

GRI'ZZLY. adj. [from gris, gray, French] Somewhat gray.
Living creatures generally do change their hair with age; turning to be gray and white; as is seen in men, though some earlier, some later; in horses that are dappled, and turn white; and in old squirrels, that turn grizzly. Bacon's Nat. History.

To GROAN v. n. [ȝpanan, Saxon; groonen, Dutch] To breathe with a hoarse noise, as in pain or agony.

Whose grossness little characters sum up. Shakespeare.

And I will purge that mortal grossness so,
That thou shalt like an airy spirit go. Shakespeare.

The cause of the epilepsy from the stomach is the grossness of the vapours which rise and enter into the cells of the brain. Bacon's Natural History, N°. 966.

Then all this earthy grossness quit,
Attir'd with stars we shall for ever sit,
Triumphing over death. Milton.

So this being the first colour which vapours begin to reflect, it ought to be the colour of the finest and most transparent skies, in which vapours are not arrived to that grossness requisite to reflect other colours. Newton's Opt.

For envy'd wit, like Sol eclips'd, was known
Th' opposing body's grossness, not its own. Pope.

2. Inelegant fatness; unwieldy corpulence.

Wise men, that be over-fat and fleshy, go to sojourn abroad at the temperate diet of some sober man; and so, by little and little, eat away the grossness that is in them. Ascham.

3. Want of refinement; want of delicacy; intellectual coarseness.

I was three or four times in the thought they were not true; and yet the gullishness of my mind drove the [illegible] the foppery into a received belief that they were false.

Whatever beauties it may want, 'tis free at least from the grossness of those faults I mentioned. Dryden.

What a grossness is there in the mind of that man, who thinks to reach a lady's heart by wounding her ears! Charissa.

GROT. n. f. [grotte, French; grotta, Italian.] A cave, a cavern for coolness and pleasure.

In the remotest wood and lonely grot,
Certain to meet that worst of evils, thought. Prior.

Awful see the Egerian grot. Pope.

GROTE'SQUE. adj. [grotesque, French; grottesco, Italian.] Distorted of figure; unnatural; wildly formed.

The champaign head
Of a steep wilderness, whose hairy sides
With thicket overgrown, grotesque and wild,
Access deny'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv.

There is yet a lower sort of poetry and painting, which is out of nature; for a farce is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture: the persons and actions of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false, that is, inconsisting with the characters of mankind. Grotesque painting is the just resemblance of this. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

[illegible] of these Fools they were
Nor airs, nor looks, nor shades, nor colours true,
And this grotesque design expos'd to publick view. Dryden.

Palladian walls, Venetian doors,
Grotesco roofs, and stucco floors. Pope's Sat. of Horace.

GRO'TTO. n. f. [grotte, French; gratta, Italian.] A cavern or cave made for coolness. It is not used properly of a dark notched cavern.

Their careless chiefs to the cool grotto's run,
The bow'rs of kings, to shade them from the sun. Dryden.

This was found at the entry of the grotto in the Peak. Woodward on Fossils.

GROVE. n. f. [from grave.] A walk covered by trees meeting above.

I took'd toward Birnam, and anon methought
The wood began to move.
Within this three mile may you see it coming,
I say, a moving grove. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Fortunate fields, and groves, and flow'ry vales;
Thrice happy isles! Milton.

Parch'd from courts and love,
Abandon'd truth seeks shelter in the [illegible] Granville.

Can fierce passions vex his breast,
While every gale is peace, and every grove
Is melody? Thomson's Spring.

To GRO'VEL. v. n. [grufeln, Islandick, flat on the face. It may perhaps come by gradual corruption from ground fall.]

1. To lie prone, to creep low on the ground.

The fleet-heal passage wrought,
And through his shoulder pierc'd, wherewith to ground
He groveling fell, and gored in his gushing wound. Fa. Qu.

What see'st thou there? king Henry's diadem,
Inchas'd with all the honours of the world?
If so, gaze on, and grovel on thy face,
Until thy head be circled with the same. Shakesp. Hen IV.

Now they lie
Groveling and prostrate on yon lake of fire. Milt. Par. Lost.

Upon thy belly grovelling thou shalt go. Milt. Par. Lost.

Let us then conclude that all painters ought to require this part of excellence: not to do it, is to want courage, and not dare to shew themselves. 'tis to creep and grovel on the ground. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. To be mean; to be without dignity or elevation.

I must disclaim whate'er he can express;
His groveling sense will show my passion less. Dryden.

Several thoughts may be natural which are low and gro[illegible]

The uſe and benefit of good laws all that live under them may enjoy with delight and comfort, albeit the grounds and firſt original cauſes from whence they have ſprung be unknown. Hooker, b. i. ſ. 1

Thou could'ſt not have diſcern'd
Fraud in the ſerpent, ſpeaking as he ſpake,
No ground of enmity between us known. Mil. Par. Loſt.

Nor did either of them ever think fit to make any particular relation of the grounds of their proceedings, or the cauſes of their miſadventures. Clarendon, b. v.

Sound judgment is the ground of writing well. Roſcomm.

Love once given from her, and plac'd in you,
Would leave no ground I ever would be true. Dryden.

If it be natural, ought we not to conclude that there is ſome ground and reaſon for theſe fears, and that nature hath not planted them in us to no purpoſe. Tillotſon.

Upon that prince's death, although the grounds of our quarrel with France had received no manner of addition, yet this lord thought fit to alter his ſentiments. Swift.

The miraculous increaſe of the profeſſors of Chriſtianity was without any viſible grounds and cauſes, and contrary to all human probability and appearance. Atterbury's Sermons.

14. The field or place of action.

He has loſt ground at the latter end of the day, by purſuing his point too far, like the prince of Conde at the battle of Senepa. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

16. The intervening ſpace between the flyer and purſuer.

Runs from a river, o'er the marſh glides,
And gathers ground faſt at the labourer's heels,
Homeward returning. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. xii.

Superiors think it a detraction from their merit to ſee another get ground upon them, and overtake them in the purſuits of glory. Addiſon's Spectator.

Even whilſt we ſpeak our conqueror comes on,
And gathers ground upon us every moment. Addiſon.

17. The ſtate in which one is with reſpect to oppoſents or competitors.

Had'ſt thou ſway'd as kings ſhould do,
Giving no ground unto the houſe of York,
They never then had ſprung. Shakeſpeare's Henry VI.

If they get ground and 'vantage of the king,
Then [illegible] them
To make them ſtronger. Shakeſpeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

He will ſtand his ground againſt all the attacks that can be made upon his probity. Atterbury's Sermons.

Whatever ground we may have gotten upon our enemies, we have gotten none upon our vices, the worſt enemies of the two; but are even ſubdued and led captive by the one, while we triumph ſo gloriouſly over the others. Atterbury's Sermons.

18. Stage of progreſs or receſſion.

I have known ſo many great examples of this cure, and heard of its being ſo familiar in Auſtria, that I wonder it has gained no more ground in other places. Temple.

The ſquirrel is perpetually turning the wheel in her cage: ſhe runs apace, and wearies herſelf with her continual motion, and gets no ground. Dryden's Dufreſnoy.

19. The foil to ſet a thing off.

Like bright metal on a ſullen [illegible],
My reformation glittering o'er my fault,
Shall ſhew more goodly, and attract more eyes,
Than that which hath no foil to ſet it off. [illegible]

To thee I apply, great Smedley's successor,
[illegible] crochet
Whom would it thou resemble? I leave thee a guesser. Swift.

GUE'SSINGLY. adv. [from guessing.] Conjecturally; uncertainly.

What confed'racy have you with the traytors
Late footed in the kingdom?
I have a letter guessingly set down,
Which came from one that's of a neutral heart,
And not from one oppos'd. Soakesp. King Lear.

GUEST. n. s [gert, gyrt, Saxon; gwest, Welsh.]

1. One entertained in the house of another

They all murmured, saying, that he was gone to be guest with a man that is a sinner Lu. xix. 7.

Methinks a father
Is, at the nuptial of his son, a guest
That best becomes the table. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

GUIDE. n. s [guide, French, from the verb.]

1. One who directs another in his way.

Judas was guide to them that took Jesus. Acts i. 16.

Thou gavest them a burning pillar of fire, to be a guide of the unknown journey. Wisd. xviii. 3.

Can knowledge have no bound, but must advance
So far to make us wish for ignorance!
And rather in the dark to grope our way,
Than led by a false guide to err by day? Denham

2. One who directs another in his conduct

While yet but young his father dy'd,

3. Director, regulator.

Who the guide of nature, but only the God of nature? In him we live, move and are. Those things which nature is said to do, are by divine art performed, using nature as an instrument: nor is there any such art or knowledge divine in nature herself working, but in the guide of nature's work. Hooker, b. i. f. 3.

Some truths are not by reason to be tried,
But we have sure experience for our guide. Dryden's Fables.

GUI'DELESS. adj [from guide.] Without a guide, without a governour or superintendant.

Th' ambitious Swede, like restless billows toss'd,
Though in his life the blood and ruin breath'd,
To his now guideless kingdom peace bequeath'd. Dryden.

There fierce winds o'er dusky valleys blow,
Whose every puff bears empty shades away,
Which guideless in those dark dominions stray. Dryden.

GUI'DER. n. s. [from guide.] Director; regulator; guide.

Our guider came to the Roman camp conduct us. Shak.

That person, that being provoked by excessive pain, thrust his dagger into his body, and thereby, instead of reaching his vitals, opened an imposthume, the unknown cause of all his pain, and so stabbed himself into perfect health and ease, surely has great reason to acknowledge chance for his chirurgeon, and providence for the guider of his hand. South.

Ne suffered aught his safety to betray;
So goodly did beguile the guiler of the prey. Fairy Queen.

GUILT. n. s. [gilt, Saxon, originally signified the fine or mulct paid for an offence, and afterward the offence itself.]

1. The state of a man justly charged with a crime; the contrary to innocence.

It was neither guilt of crime, nor reason of state, that could quench the envy that was upon the king for this execution. Bacon's Henry VII.

When these two are taken away, the possibility of guilt, and the possibility of innocence, what restraint can the belief of the creed lay upon any man? Hammond on Fundamentals.

2. A crime; an offence.

Close pent up guilts
Rive your concealing continents, and ask
These dreadful summoners grace. Shakesp. King Lear.

GUI'LTILY. adv. [from guilty.] Without innocence, without clearness of conscience.

Bloody and guilty, guiltily awake,
And in a bloody battle end thy days:
Think on lord Hastings, and despair and die. Shak. R. III.

GUI'LTINESS. n. s. [from guilty.] The state of being guilty; wickedness; consciousness of crime.

He thought his flight rather to proceed of a fearful guiltiness than of an humble faithfulness. Sidney, b. ii.

The last was I that felt thy tyranny:
O, in the battle think on Buckingham,
And die in terrour of thy guiltiness. Shakesp. Richard III.

I should be guiltier than my guiltiness. Shakespeare.

GUI'LTLESS. adj. [from guilt.] Innocent; free from crime.

I am in this commanded to deliver
The noble duke of Clarence to your hands:
I will not reason what is meant hereby,
Because I will be guiltless of the meaning. Shakesp. R. III.

Many worthy and chaste dames thus,
All guiltless, meet reproach. Shakespeare's Othello.

Then shall the man be guiltless from iniquity, and this woman shall bear her iniquity. Num. v. 31.

Thou, who do'st all thou wilt at thy will,
And never willest aught but what is right,
Preserve this guiltless blood they seek to spill.
Thine be my kingdom, Fairfax.

Guiltless of greatness, thus he always pray'd,
No [illegible] that [illegible]
On his own head should be at last repaid. Dryden.

Thou know'st how guiltless first I met thy flame,
When love approach'd me under friendship's name. Pope.

GUI'LTLESSLY. adv. [from guiltless.] Without guilt; innocently.

GUI'LTLESSNESS. n. s. [from guiltless.] Innocence; freedom from crime.

A good number, trusting to their number more than to their value, and valuing money higher than equity, felt that guiltlessness is not always with ease oppressed. Sidney, b. ii.

I would not have had any hand in his death, of whose guiltlessness I was better assured than any man living could be. King Charles

GUILTY. adj. [gilcig, Saxon, one condemned to pay a fine for an offence.]

1. Justly chargeable with a crime; not innocent.

Is there not a ballad of the king and the beggar?
—The world was guilty of such a ballad some three ages since. Shakespeare's Love's Labour Lost.

Tempeſts themſelves, high ſeas, and howling winds,
[illegible]
Traitors enſteep'd to clog the guiltleſs keel,
As having ſenſe of beauty, do omit
Their mortal natures, letting ſafe go by
The divine Deſdemona. Shakeſpeare's Othello.
My cheeks are guttered with my fretting tears. Sandys.
Firſt in a place, by nature cloſe, they found
A narrow flooring, gutter'd, wall'd, and roof'd. Dryden.
The gutter'd rocks, and many-winding cleſts. Thomſon

He hath a better bad habit of frowning than the count Palatine. Shakeſp. Merchant of Venice.

4. Cuſtom; inveterate uſe.

This is the laſt fatal ſtep but one, which is, by frequent repetition of the ſinful act, to continue and perſiſt in it, 'till at length it ſettles into a fixed confirmed habit of ſin; which being properly that which the apoſtle calls the finiſhing of ſin, ends certainly in death; death not only as to merit, but alſo as to actual infliction. South's Sermons.

No civil broils have ſince his death aroſe,
But faction now by habit does obey,
And wars have that reſpect for his repoſe,
As winds for halcyons when they breed at ſea. Dryden.

The force of education is ſo great, that we may mould the minds and manners of the young into what ſhape we pleaſe, and give the impreſſions of ſuch habits as ſhall ever afterwards remain. Atterbury's Sermons.

To HA'BIT v. a. [from the noun.] To dreſs; to accoutre; to array.

Preſent yourſelf and your fair princeſs
Before Leontes.
She ſhall be habited as it becomes
The partner of your bed. Shakeſp. Winter's Tale.

HA'LLOO. interj. [The original of this word is controverted: some imagine it corrupted from a lui, to him! others from allons, let us go! and Skinner from haller, to draw.] A word of encouragement when dogs are let loose on their game.

Some popular chief,
More noisy than the rest, but cries halloo,
And, in a trice, the bellowing herd come out. Dryden.

To HA'LLOO. v. n. [haler, Fr.] To cry as after the dogs.

A number of country folks hallooed and houted after me, as at the arrantest coward that ever shewed his shoulders to his enemy. Sidney, b. ii.

A cry more tuneable
Was never hallooed to, nor cheer'd with horn. Shakespeare.

To HA'LLOO. v. a.

1. To encourage with shouts.

If, whilst a boy, Jack ran from school,
Fond of his hunting-horn and pole,
Though gout and age his speed detain,
Old John hallows his hounds again. Prior.

2. To chase with shouts.

If I fly, Marcius
Halloo me like a hare. Shakespeare.

3. To call or shout to.

When we have found the king, he that first lights on him,
Hallos the other. Shakespeare's King

To HALLOW. v. a. [halgian, halig, Saxon, holy.]

1. To consecrate, to make holy.

When we sanctify or hallow churches, it is only to testify that we make them places of publick resort, that we invite God himself with them, and that we sever them from common uses. Hooker, b. v. f. 12.

With us it cannot be endured to hear a man openly professing that he putteth fire to his neighbour's house, but yet so hallowing the same with prayer, that he hopeth it shall not burn. Hooker, b. v. f. 29.

Is't Cade that I have slain, that monstrous traitor?
Sword, I will hallow thee for this thy deed,
And hang thee o'er my tomb, when I am dead. Shakesp.

My prayers
Are not words duly hallow'd, nor my wishes
More worth than vanities; yet pray'rs and wishes
Are all I can return. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

And from work
Now resting, bless'd and hallow'd the seventh day,
As resting on that day from all his works,
But not in silence holy kept. Milton.

Then banish'd faith shall once again return,
And vestal fires in hallow'd temples burn. Dryden's Virg.

No satyr lurks within this hallow'd ground;
But nymphs and heroines, kings and gods abound. Granv.

2. To reverence as holy; hallowed be thy name.

HALLUCINA'TION. n. s. [hallucinatio, Latin.] Errour, blunder; mistake; folly.

A wasting of flesh, without cause, is frequently termed a bewitched disease; but questionless a meer hallucination of the vulgar. Harvey on Consumptions.

HA'LTER. n. f. [pealfrepe, Saxon, from palf, the neck.]

1. A rope to hang malefactors.

He's fled, my lord, and all his pow'rs do yield;
And humbly thus, with halters on their necks,
Expect your highness' doom of life or death. Shak. H. VI

Answer was made, it was by the sword if they stood upon defence, and by the halter if they yielded; wherefore they made choice to die rather as soldiers than as dogs. Hayward.

Were I a drowsy judge, whose dismal note
Disgorgeth halters, as a juggler's throat
Doth ribbands. Cleaveland.

When the times began to alter,
None rise so high as from the halter. Hudibras, p.

He gets renown, who, to the halter near,
But narrowly escapes, and buys it dear. Dryden's Juvenal.

2. A cord, a strong string.

Whom neither halter binds nor burthens charge. Sandys.

To HA'LTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind with a cord, to catch in a noose.

Rome oft has heard a cross haranguing,
With prompting priest behind the hanging. Prior.

HANGING participial adj. [from hang.]

1. Foreboding death by the halter

Surely, sir, a good favour you have; but that you have a hanging look. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

What Ethiops lips he has!
How foul a snout, and what a hanging face! Dryd. Juven.

2. Requiring to be punished by the halter

HA'NGMAN n. f. [hang and man.] The publick executioner.

This monster sat like a hangman upon a pair of gallows; in his right hand he was painted holding a crown of laurel, and in his left hand a purse of money. Stanley, b. ii.

One cried, God bless us! and amen! the other,
As they had seen me with these hangman's hands.
Listening their fear, I could not say amen,
When they did say God bless us. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

He hath twice or thrice cut Cupid's bowstring, and the little hangman dare not shoot at him. Shakespeare.

Who makes that noise there? Who are you?
—Your friend, sir, the hangman; you must be so good, sir, to rise, and be put to death. Shakesp. Meas for Measure.

Men do not stand
In so ill case, that God hath with his hand
Sign'd kings blank charters to kill whom they hate,
Nor are they vicars, but hangmen to fate Donne.

I never knew a critick, who made it his business to lash the faults of other writers, that was not guilty of greater himself, as the hangman is generally a worse malefactor than the criminal that suffers by his hand Addison's Whig Examiner.

HANK. n. f. [hank, Islandick, a chain or coil of rope]

1. A skein of thread.

2. A tye; a check, an influence. A low word.

HAP. n. f. [anhap, in Welsh, is misfortune]

1. Chance, fortune.

Things casual do vary, and that which a man doth but chance to think well of cannot still have the like hap. Hooker.

Whether art it were, or heedless hap,
As through the flow'ring forest rash she flew,
In her rude hairs sweet flowers themselves did lace,
And flourishing fresh leaves and blossoms did enwrap. F. Q.

A fox had the hap to fall into the walk of a lion. L'Estr.

2. That which happens by chance or fortune.

Curst be good haps, and curst be they that build
Their hopes on haps, and do not make despair
For all these certain blows the surest shield. Sidney.

To have ejected whatsoever that church doth make account of, without any other crime than that it hath been the hap thereof to be used by the church of Rome, and not to be commanded in the word of God, might haply have pleased some few men, who, having begun such a course themselves, must be glad to see their example followed. Hooker, b. iv.

3. Accident; casual event, misfortune.

Suleyman commended them for their valour in their evil haps, more than the victory of others got by good fortune. Knolles.

Nor feared she among the bands to stray
Of armed men; for often had she seen
The tragick end of many a bloody fray:
Her life had full of haps and hazards been. Fairfax, b. vi.

HAP-HAZARD. n. f. Chance; accident.

The former of these is the most sure and infallible way; but so hard that all shun it, and had rather walk as men do in the dark by hap-hazard, than tread so long and intricate mazes for knowledge sake. Hooker, b. i. f 7.

We live at haphazard, and without any insight into causes and effects. L'Estrange.

We take our principles at hap-hazard upon trust, and without ever having examined them, and then believe a whole system, upon a presumption that they are true. Locke.

To HAP. v. n. [from the noun.] To come by accident; to fall out; to happen.

Us, haply too secure, of our discharge
From penalty, because from death releas'd
Some days. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

Then haply yet your breast remains untouch'd,
Though that seems strange. Rowe's Royal Convert

Let us now see what conclusions may be found for instruction of any other state, that may haply labour under the like circumstances. Swift on the Dissent. in Athens and Rome

2. By chance, by accident.

Leviathan, which God of all his works
Created hugest, that swim the ocean stream,
Him haply slumb'ring on the Norway foam,
The pilot of some small night-founder'd skiff
Deeming some island oft, as seamen tell,
With fixed anchor in his scaly rind,
Moors by his side. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

HA'PLESS. adj. [from hap.] Unhappy, unfortunate, luckless, unlucky

Hapleſs Ægeon, whom the fates have mark'd
To bear th' extremity of dire miſhap! Shakeſpeare.
Here hapleſs Icarus had found his part,
Had not the father's grief reſtrain'd his art. Dryden's Æn.
Did his hapleſs paſſion equal mine,
I would reſuſe the bliſs. Smith's Phædra and Hippolitus.

HA'RROW. n. ſ. [charrue, French; harcke, German, a rake.]
A frame of timbers croſſing each other, and ſet with teeth, drawn over ſowed ground to break the clods and throw the earth over the ſeed
The land with daily care
Is exerciſ'd, and with an iron war
Of rakes and harrows. Dryden's Georgick.
Two ſmall harrows, that clap on each ſide of the rider, harrow it right up and down. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To HA'RROW v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To break with the harrow
Friend, harrow in time, by ſome manner of means,
Not only thy peaſon, but alſo thy beans. Tuſſ. Husbandry.
Can'ſt thou bind the unicorn with his band in the furrow? or will he harrow the valleys after thee? Job xxxix. 10.
Let the Volſcians
Plow Rome, and harrow Italy, I'll never
Be ſuch a goſſing to obey inſtinct. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.

2. To tear up, to rip up.
I could a tale unfold, whoſe lighteſt word
Would harrow up thy ſoul, freeze thy young blood,
Make thy two eyes, like ſtars, ſtart from their ſpheres. Sh.
Imagine you behold me bound and ſcourg'd,
My aged muſcles harrow'd up with whips;
Or hear me groaning on the rending rack. Rowe.

3. To pillage; to ſtrip; to lay waſte. See HARRY, which in Scotch is the ſame thing.
As the king did excel in good commonwealth laws, ſo he had in ſecret a deſign to make uſe of them, as well for collecting of treaſure as for correcting of manners; and it meaning thereby to harrow his people, did accumulate them the rather Baron's Henry VII.

4. To invade; to haraſs with incurſions. [from perpan, Saxon.]
And he that harrow'd hell with heavy ſtowre,
The faulty ſouls from thence brought to his heavenly bowre.
Fairy Queen, b. 1. cant. 10.
Moſt glorious Lord of Life, that on this day
Did'ſt make thy triumph over death and ſin;
And having harrow'd hell, did'ſt bring away
Captivity thence captive, us to win. Spenſer's Sonnets.

5. To diſturb, to put into commotion. [This ſhould rather be written harry, harer, French.]

That I ſo harry'd him. Shakeſp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

2. In Scotland it ſignifies to rob, plunder, or oppreſs. as, one harried a neſt, that is, he took the young away: as a ſoldier harried me out of houſe and home; that is, he robbed me of my goods, and turned me out of doors. See To HARRASS.

HARSH. adj. [verſch, German, Skinner.]
1. Auſtere; roughly ſour
Our nature here is not unlike our ſoil,
Some ſorts, when old, continue ſtiff and ſoure
So age's gravity may ſeem ſevere,
But nothing harſh or bitter ought t'appear. Denham.
Sweet, bitter, ſour, harſh and fair, are all the epithets we have to denominate that numberleſs variety of ſenſibles. Locke.
The ſame defect of heat which gives a hoarſeneſs to our natures, may contribute to that roughneſs of our language, which bears ſome apology to the harſh fruit of colder countries. Swift to the Lord High Treaſurer.

2. Rough to the ear
A name unmuſical to Volſcian ears,
And harſh in ſound to thine. Shakeſp. Cor.
Age might, what nature never gives the young,
Have taught the ſmoothneſs of thy native tongue;
But ſatire needs not that, and wit will ſhine
Through the harſh cadence of a rugged line. Dryden.
The unneceſſary conſonants made their ſpelling tedious, and their pronunciation harſh. Dryden.
Thy lord commands thee now
With a harſh voice, and ſupercilious brow,
To ſerv'le duties. Dryden's Perſ. Sat 5.

3. Crabbed, moroſe; peeviſh.
He was a wiſe man and an eloquent; but in his nature harſh and haughty. Bacon's Henry VII.

I tell you, 'twould ſound harſhly in her ears. Shakeſpeare.
Get from him why he puts on this confuſion,
Grating ſo harſhly all his days of quiet
With turbulent and dang'rous lunacy. Shakeſp. Hamlet.
A hollow groan, a murm'ring wind aroſe,
The rings of iron that on the doors were hung,
Sent out a jarring ſound, and harſhly rung. Dryd. Fables.

HA'RSHNESS n. ſ. [from harſh.]
1. Sourneſs, auſtere taſte
Take an apple and roll it upon a table hard: the rolling doth ſoften and ſweeten the fruit, which is nothing but the ſmooth diffuſion of the ſpirits into the parts; for the unequal diſtribution of the ſpirits maketh the harſhneſs. Ba.

2. Roughneſs to the ear.
Neither can the natural harſhneſs of the French, or the perpetual ill accent, be ever refined into perfect harmony like the [illegible]
Cannot I admire the height of Milton's invention, and the ſtrength of his expreſſion, without defending his antiquated words, and the perpetual harſhneſs of their ſound? Dryden.

'Tis not enough no harſhneſs gives offence,
The ſound muſt ſeem an echo to the ſenſe. Pope.

3. Ruggedneſs to the touch
Harſhneſs and ruggedneſs of bodies is unpleaſant to the touch Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

4. Crabbedneſs; moroſeneſs; peeviſhneſs.
No, Regan, you ſhall never have my curſe.
Thy tender-hefted nature ſhall not give
Thee o'er to harſhneſs: her eyes are fierce, but thine
Do comfort and not burn. Shakeſp. King Lear.

HART n. ſ. [peort, Saxon.] A he-deer of the large kind; the male of the roe.
That infant was I turn'd into a hart,
And my delires, like fell and cruel hounds,
E'er ſince purſue me. Shakeſ. Twelfth Night.
The deer
And fearful harts do wander every where Amidſt the dogs. Addiſon's Virgil's Georg.

HART

Hartſhorn is a drug that comes into uſe as many ways, and under as many forms, as any one in the whole materia medica. What is uſed here are the whole horns of the common male deer, which fall off every year. This ſpecies is the fallow deer; but ſome tell us, that the medicinal hartſhorn ſhould be that of the true hart or ſtag, called the red deer. The ſalt of hartſhorn is a great ſudorific, and the ſpirit has all the virtues of volatile alkalies: it is uſed to bring people out of faintings by its pungency, holding it under the noſe, and pouring down ſome drops of it in water. Hill's Mat. Med.

Ramoſe concretions of the volatile ſalts are obſervable upon the glaſs of the receiver, whilſt the ſpirits of vipers and hartſhorn are drawn. Woodward on Foſſils.

HEAT n. s. [hæt, hætt, Saxon; hete, Danish.]

1. The sensation caused by the approach or touch of fire.

Heat is a very brisk agitation of the insensible parts of the object, which produces in us that sensation from whence we denominate the object hot; so what in our sensation is heat, in the object is nothing but motion. Locke.

The word heat is used to signify the sensation we have when we are near the fire, as well as the cause of that sensation, which is in the fire itself, and thence we conclude, that there is a sort of heat in the fire resembling our own sensation: whereas in the fire there is nothing but little particles of matter, of such particular shapes as are fitted to impress such motions on our flesh as excite the sense of heat. Watts.

2. The cause of the sensation of burning.

The sword which is made fiery doth not only cut by reason of the sharpness which simply it hath, but also burn by means of that heat which it hath from fire. Hooker, b. v.

After they came down into the valley, and found the intolerable heats which are there, and knew no means of lighter apparel, they were forced to begin the custom of going naked. Bacon's New Atlantis.

3. Hot weather.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood;
The glebe will answer to the sylvan reign,
Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain. Dryden.

The pope would not comply with the proposal, as fearing the heats might advance too far before they had finished their work, and produce a pestilence among the people. Addison.

4. State of any body under the action of the fire.

The heats in the take of their iron are a blood-red heat, a white flame heat, and a sparkling or welding heat. Moxon.

5. One violent action unintermitted.

The continual agitations of the spirits must needs be a weakening of any constitution, especially in age; and many causes are required for refreshment betwixt the heats. Dryden.

6. The state of being once hot.

I'd strike my fortune with him at a heat,
And give him not the leisure to forget. Dryden's Aurengz.

7. A course at a race, between each of which courses there is an intermission.

Reign'd zeal, you saw, set out the speedier pace,
But the last heat, plain dealing won the race. Dryden.

The friend hath lost his friend;
And the best quarrels, in the heat, are curst
By those that feel their sharpness. Shakesp. King Lear.

It might have pleased in the heat and hurry of [illegible] must have displeased in the cool sedate reflections of his mind. South's Serm.

We have spilt no blood but in the heat of the battle, or the chase. Atterbury's Sermons.

One playing at hazard, held in many hands together, and drew a huge heap of gold; but, in the heat of play, never observed a sharper, who swept it into his hat. Swift.

10. Faction; contest, party rage.

Our state thinks not so: they are in a most warlike preparation, and hope to come upon them in the heat of their [illegible] Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

I was sorry to hear with what partiality and popular heat elections were carried. King Charles.

What can more gratify the Phrygian foe
Than those distemper'd heats? Dryden's Homer.

11. Ardour of thought or elocution.

Plead it to her
With all the strength and heats of eloquence,
Fraternal love and friendship can inspire. Addison's Cato.

To HEAT. v. a. [from the noun.]

But you can live to verfes give. Waller.

3. Reciting the acts of heroes.

Methinks heroick poefy, 'till now,
Like fome fantaftick fairy land did fhow. Cowley.

I have chofen the moft heroick fubject which any poet could defire: I have taken upon me to defcribe the motives, the beginning, progrefs and fucceffes of a moft juft and neceffary war. Dryden's Ann. Mirab. Preface.

An heroick poem is the greateft which the foul of man is capable to perform: the defign of it is to form the mind to heroick virtue by example. Dryden.

HERO'ICKLY. adv. [from heroick] Suitably to an hero. Heroically is more frequent, and more analogical.

Samion hath quit himfelf
Like Samfon, and heroickly hath finifh'd
A life heroick. Milton's Agonifles.

HE'ROINE. n. f. [from hero, heroine, French.] A female hero. Anciently, according to Engliih analogy, heroefs.

But inborn worth, that fortune can controul,
New-ftrung, and ftiffer bent her fofter foul,
The heroine aflum'd the woman's place,
Confirm'd her mind, and fortify'd her face. Dryden

Then fhall the Britifh ftage
More noble characters expofe to view,
And draw her finifh'd heroine, from you. Addifon.

HE'ROISM. n. f. [heroifme, French] The qualities or character of an hero.

If the Odyffey be lefs noble than the Iliad, it is more inftructive: the Iliad abounds with more heroifm, this with more morality. Broome's Notes to the Odyffey.

He from deep wells with engines water drew,
And us'd his noble hands the wood to hew. Dryd. Fables.

3. To fell, as with an ax.

He that depends
Upon your favours, swims with fins of lead,
And hews down oaks with rushes. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Brave followers, yonder stands the thorny wood,
Which, by the heav'n's assistance and your strength,
Must by the roots be hewn up yet ere night. Shakesp. H VI.

Yet shall the axe of justice hew him down,
And level with the root his lofty crown. Sandys.

He from the mountain hewing timber tall,
Began to build a vessel of huge bulk. Milton's Parad. Lost.

We'll force the gate where Marcus keeps his guard,
And hew down all that would oppose our passage. Addison.

4. To form or shape with an axe.

Thou hast hewed thee out a sepulchre here, as he that heweth him out a sepulchre on high. Is. xxii. 16.

Nor is it so proper to hew out religious reformations by the sword, as to polish them by fair and equal disputations. K. Ch.

This river rises in the very heart of the Alps, and has a long valley that seems hewn out on purpose to give its waters a passage amidst so many rocks. Addison on Italy.

Next unto bricks are preferred the square hewn stone. Mort.

5. To form laboriously.

The gate was adamant; eternal frame!
Which, hew'n by Mars himself, from Indian quarries came,
The labour of a god. Dryden's Fables.

I now pass my days, not studious nor idle, rather pouring old works than hewing out new. Pope to Swift.

HE'WER. n. f. [from hew.] One whose employment is to cut wood or stone.

At the building of Solomon's temple there were fourscore thousand hewers in the mountains. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

HEXAGON. n. f [hexagone, French; ἕξ and γωνία.] A figure of six sides or angles: the most capacious of all the figures that can be added to each other without any interstice; and therefore the cells in honeycombs are of that form.

HEXA'GONAL. adj. [from hexagon.] Having six sides or corners.

As for the figures of crystal, it is for the most part hexagonal, or six-cornered. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Many of them shoot into regular figures; as crystal and bastard diamonds into hexagonal. Ray on the Creation.

HEXAGONY n. f. [from hexagon.] A figure of six angles.

When I read in St. Ambrose of hexagones, or hexangular cellars of bees, did I therefore conclude that they were mathematicians? Bramh against Hobbs.

HEXA'METER. n. f. [ἕξ and μέτρον.] A verse of six feet.

The Latin hexameter has more feet than the English heroick. Dryden.

Hexangular sprigs or shoots of crystal, of various sizes, some clear, and others a little soiled. Woodward on Fossils.

HEXA'POD. n. f. [ἕξ and πόδες.] An animal with six feet.

I take those to have been the hexapods, from which the greater sort of beetles come; for that sort of hexapods are eaten in America. Ray on the Creation.

HEXA'STICK. n. f. [ἕξ and στίχος.] A poem of six lines.

HEY. interj. [from high.] An expression of joy, or mutual exhortation; the contrary to the Latin hei.

Shadwell from the town retires,
To bless the wood with peaceful lyrick;
Then hey for praise and panegyrick. Prior.

HE'YDAY. interj. [for high day.] An expression of frolick and exultation, and sometimes of wonder.

I shou'd say anon he is some kin to thee,
Thou spend'st such heyday wit in praising him. Shakespeare.

'I was a strange riddle of a lady,
Not love, if any lov'd her, heyday!

HE'YDAY. n. f. A frolick; wildness.

At your age
The heyday in the blood is tame, it's humble,
And waits upon the judgment. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

HE'YDEGIVES. n. f. A wild frolick dance.

But friendly fairys met with many graces,
And light-foot nymphs can chase the ling'ring night
With heydegives, and trimly trodden traces.

HIA'TION. n. f [from hio, Latin.] The act of gaping.

Men observing the continual hiation, or holding open its mouth, conceive the intention thereof to receive the aliment of air, but this is also occasioned by the greatness of the lungs. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

HIA'TUS n. f. [hiatus, Latin.]

1. An aperture; a breach.

Those hiatus's are at the bottom of the sea, whereby the abyss below open into and communicates with it. Woodward.

2. The opening of the mouth by the succession of an initial to a final vowel.

The hiatus should be avoided with more care in poetry than in oratory, and I would try to prevent it, unless where the cutting it off is more prejudicial to the sound than the hiatus itself. Pope.

HIBE'RNAL. adj [hibernus, Latin.] Belonging to the Winter.

This star should rather manifest its warming power in the Winter, when it remains conjoined with the sun in its hibernal conversion. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

HICCIUS DOCCIUS n. f. [corrupted, I fancy, from hic est doctus, this or here is the learned man. Used by jugglers of themselves.] A cant word for a juggler; one that plays fast and loose.

An old dull fop, who told the clock
For many years at Bridewell dock,
At Westminster and Hicks's hall,
And hiccius doccius play'd in all,
Where, in all governments and times,
H' had been both friend and foe to crimes. Hudibras, p. iii.

HICCOUGH. n. f. [hi, Danish.] A convulsion of the stomach producing sobs.

So by an abbey's skeleton of late
I heard an echo supererogate
Through imperfection, and the voice restore,
As if she had the hiccough o'er and o'er. Cleaveland.

My affairs
Do even drag me homeward Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

Since such love's natural station is, may still
My love descend, and journey down the hill,
Not panting after growing beauties, so
I shall ebb on with them who homeward go. Donne.

Look homeward, angel now, and melt with ruth,
And, O ye dolphins, waft the hapless youth. Milton.

Like a long team of snowy swans on high,
Which clap their wings, and cleave the liquid sky,
Which homeward from their wat'ry pastures born,
They sing, and Asia's lakes their notes return. Dryd. Æn.

What now remains,
But that once more we tempt the wat'ry plains,
And, wand'ring homewards, seek our safety hence. Dryden.

HOMICIDE. n. s. [homicide, Fr. homicidium, Lat.]

1. Murder; manquelling.

The apostles command to abstain from blood: construe this according to the law of nature, and it will seem, that homicide only is forbidden; but construe it in reference to the law of the Jews, about which the question was, and it shall easily appear to have a clean other sense, and a truer, when we expound it of eating, and not of shedding blood. Hooker, b. iv.

2 Destruction

2 Deſtruction. In the following lines it is not proper.

What wonder is't that black detraction thrives!
The homicide of names is leſs than lives. Dryden.

3. [Homicide, Fr. homicida, Lat.] A murderer; a manſlayer.

Your beauty, that did haunt me in my ſleep,
To undertake the death of all the world,
So might I live one hour in your ſweet boſom.
——If I thought that, I tell thee, homicide,
Theſe nails ſhould rend that beauty from my cheeks. Shakeſ.

Thou ſhalt not have thy huſband's lands.
——Why, then mine honeſty ſhall be my dower Shakeſp.

Goodneſs, as that which makes men prefer their duty and their promiſe before their paſſions or their intereſt, and is properly the object of truſt, in our language goes rather by the name of honeſty; though what we call an honeſt man, the Romans called a good man, and honeſty in their language, as well as in French, rather ſignifies a compoſition of thoſe qualities which generally acquire honour and eſteem. Temple.

HO'NIED. adj [from honey]

1. Covered with honey.

The bee with honied thigh,
That at her flow'ry work doth ſing. Milton.

2. Sweet; luſcious.

When he ſpeaks,
The air, a charter'd libertine, is ſtill,
And the mute wonder lurketh in mens ears,
To ſteal his ſweet and honied ſentences. Shakeſp. Henry V.
Look now for no enchanting voice, nor fear
The bait of honey'd words; a rougher tongue
Draws hitherward. Milton's Agoniſtes.

HONEY n. ſ. [ɲunig, Saxon; honig, Dutch, honet, honag, Welſh.]

1. A thick, viſcous, fluid ſubſtance, of a whitiſh or yellowiſh colour, ſweet to the taſte, ſoluble in water, and becoming vinous on fermentation, inflammable, liquable by a gentle heat, and of a fragrant ſmell. We have three kinds of honey: the firſt and fineſt is virgin honey, not very firm, and of a fragrant ſmell. It is the firſt produce of the ſwarm, obtained by draining from the combs without preſſing. The ſecond is thicker than the firſt, often almoſt ſolid, procured from the combs by preſſure: and the worſt is the common yellow honey, extracted by heating the combs over the fire, and then preſſing them. In the flowers of plants, by certain glands near the baſis in the petals, is ſecreted a ſweet juice, which the bee, by means of its proboſcis or trunk, ſucks up, ſwallows it, flies away with it to the hive, and diſcharges again from the ſtomach through the mouth into ſome of the cells of the comb. The honey thus taken up into the body of the bee, and depoſited again into the cells of the comb, is deſtined for the food of the young offspring; but in hard ſeaſons the bees are ſometimes reduced to the neceſſity of feeding on it themſelves, and die of hunger after they have eat it all up. Honey, taken out of the new combs early in the Summer, is vaſtly preferrable to that taken from the ſame hive in Autumn. Honey is an excellent pectoral, is detergent, aperient, and diuretick. Hill's Mat. Med.

So work the honey bees,
Creatures that by a ruling nature teach
The art of order to a peopled kingdom. Shakeſ. Hen V.

The like contention is found among the Greeks, touching his education and firſt noſtering: ſome affirm, that he was fed by honey bees. Raleigh's Hiſtory of the World.

In ancient time there was a kind of honey, which, either of its own nature, or by art, would grow as hard as ſugar, and was not ſo luſcious as ours. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

When the patient is rich, there's no fear of phyſic ans about him, as thick as waſps to a honey pot.

Honey is the moſt elaborate production of the vegetable kind, being a moſt exquiſite vegetable ſope, reſolvent of the bile, balſamick and pectoral: honey contains no inflammable ſpirit, before it has felt the force of fermentation; for by diſtillation it affords nothing that will burn in the fire. Arbuthn.

New wine, with honey tempered milk we bring;
Then living waters from the cryſtal ſpring. Pope's Odyſſey.

2. Sweetneſs; luſciouſneſs.

The king hath found
Matter againſt him, that for ever mars
The honey of his language. Shakeſpeare's Henry VIII.

Is fancy's ſpring, but ſorrow's fall. Shakeſpeare.

3. A name of tenderneſs, ſweet, ſweetneſs. [Mel; carcſſum.]

Honey, you ſhall be well deſir'd in Cyprus,
I've found great love amongſt them. Oh, my ſweet,
I prattle out of faſhion, and I dote
In mine own comfort. Shakeſpeare's Othello.
Why, honey bird, I bought him on purpoſe for thee, did it not thou ſay, thou long'dſt for a Chriſtian ſlave? Dryden.

To HO'NEY. v. n. [from the noun.] To talk fondly.

Nay, but to live
In the rank ſweat of an inceſtuous bed,
Stew'd in corruption, honeying and making love
Over the naſty ſty. Shakeſpeare's Hamlet

In

They are produced in cluſters, and are very ſweet Miller enumerates ten ſpecies, of which three grow wild in our hedges.
Bid her ſteal into the pleached bower,
Where honey-ſuckles, ripen'd by the ſun,
Forbid the ſun to enter; like to favourites,
Made proud by princes, that advance their pride
Againſt the power that bred it. Shakeſpeare.
Watch upon a bank
With ivy canopied, and interwove
With flaunting honeyſuckle. Milton.
Then melilot beat, and honey-ſuckles pound;
With theſe alluring ſavours ſtrew the ground. Dryd. Virgil.

HONEYLESS. adj. [from honey.] Without honey.
But for your words, they rob the Hybla bees,
And leave them honeyleſs. Shakeſp. Julius Cæſar.

HO'NEY-WORT. n. f. [cerinthe, Latin.] A plant
It hath glaucous deep green leaves, which are, for the moſt part, beſet with prickles: the flowers are cylindrical, conſiſting of one leaf, in ſhape like thoſe of comfrey, and are pendulous each flower turns to the top of the ſecond page of the third leaf following. Miller.

HONORARY. adj. [honorarius, Latin.]
1. Done in honour
There was probably ſome diſtinction made among the Romans between ſuch honorary arches erected to emperors, and thoſe that were raiſed to them on the account of a victory, which are properly triumphal arches. Addiſon on Italy.
This monument is only honorary; for the aſhes of the emperor lie elſewhere. Addiſon on Italy.

If by honour is meant any thing diſtinct from conſcience, 'tis no more than a regard to the cenſure and eſteem of the world. Rogers's Sermons.
6. Reverence; due veneration
They take thee for their mother,
And every day do honour to thy grave. Shakeſ. Cymbeline.
There, my lord,
The high promotion of his grace of Canterbury,
Who holds his ſtate at door, 'mongſt purſuivants.
—— Ha! 'tis he, indeed!
Is this the honour they do one another? Shakeſp. Hen. VIII.
This is a duty in the fifth commandment, required towards our prince and our parents, under the name of honour, a reſpect, which, in the notion of it, imp.es a mixture of love and fear, and, in the object, equally ſuppoſes goodneſs and power. Rogers's Ser.

2. One who has violent and peculiar passions.

By a wise and timous inquisition the peccant humours and humorists must be discovered and purged, or cut off: mercy, in such a case, in a king, is true cruelty. Bacon to Villiers.

HU'MOROUS. adj. [from humour]

1. Full of grotesque or odd images.

Some of the commentators tell us, that Marsya was a lawyer who had lost his cause; others that this passage alludes to the story of the future Marsyas, who contended with Apollo, which I think is more humorous. Addison on Italy.

Thy humorous vein, thy pleasing folly,
Lies all neglected, all forgot,
And pensive, wav'ring, melancholy,
Thou dread'st and hop'st thou know'st not what. Prior.

2. Capricious; irregular; without any rule but the present whim.

[illegible] known to be a humorous patrician; fain to be somewhat imperfect, in favouring the first complaint, hasty and tinder-like, upon too trivial motion. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Thou fortune's champion, that dost never fight
But when her humorous ladyship is by,
To teach thee safety. Shakesp. King John.

[illegible]
As flaws congeal'd in the spring of day. Shakesp. Hen. IV.

O, you awake then come away,
Times be short, are made for play,
The humorous moon too will not stay
What doth make you thus delay? Ben Johnson.

Vast as his courage, boundless as his mind,

HUMOUR. n. s. [humeur, French; humor, Latin]

1. Moisture.

The aqueous humour of the eye will not freeze, which is very acid rabbi, [illegible] hath the perspicuity and fluidity of common water. Ray on the Creation

2. The different kind of moisture in man's body, reckoned by the old physicians to be phlegm, blood, choler, and melancholy, which, as they predominated, were supposed to determine the temper of mind.

Believe not these suggestions, which proceed
From anguish of the mind and humours black,
That mingle with thy fancy. Milton's Agonistes.

3. General turn or temper of mind.

As there is no humour, to which impudent poverty cannot make itself serviceable, so were there enow of those of desperate ambition, who would build their houses upon others ruin. Sidney, b. ii.

There came with her a young lord, led hither with the humour of youth, which ever thinks that good whose goodness he sees not. Sidney.

King James, as he was a prince of great judgment, so he was a prince of a marvellous pleasant humour: as he was going through Lusen by Greenwich, he asked what town it was; they said Lusen. He asked, a good while after, what town is this we are now in? They said still it was Lusen: said the king, I will be king of Lusen. Bacon's Apophthegms.

Examine how your humour is inclined,
And which the ruling passion of your mind. Roscommon.

I've heard myself proclaim'd;
And by the happy hollow of a tree,
Escap'd the hunt. Shakespeare's King Lear.

HU'NTER, n. s. [from hunt.]

1. One who chases animals for pastime.

If those English lords had been good hunters, and reduced the mountains, bogges, and woods within the limits of forests, chaces and parks, the forest law would have driven them into the plains. Davies on Ireland.

Down from a hill the beast that reigns in woods,
First hunter then, pursu'd a gentle brace,
Goodliest of all the forest, hart and hind. Milt. Par. Lost.

Another's crimes th' unhappy hunter bore,
Guilting his father's eyes with guiltless gore. Dryden's Æn.

This was the arms or device of our old Roman hunters, a passage of Manilius lets us know the pagan hunters had Meleager for their patron. Addison on Italy.

Bold Nimrod first the savage chace began,
A mighty hunter, and his game was man. Pope.

2. A dog that scents game or beasts of prey

Of dogs, the vain'd file

Fond of his huntinghorn and pole. Prior.

HU'NTRESS, n. s. [from hunter.] A woman that follows the chace

And thou thrice crowned queen of night, survey
With thy chaste eye, from thy pale sphere above,
Thy huntress' name, that my full life doth sway. Shakesp.

Is not chastity a virtue universally acknowledged to be of a sacred and venerable character? Is not Diana, on account of her chastity, the most illustrious of all the goddesses? Hence is she called
Antiquity from the old schools of Greece,
To testify the arms of chastity?
Hence had the huntress Dian her dread bow,
Fair silver-shafted queen, for ever chaste. Milton.

Let old Arcadia boast her ample plain,
Th' immortal huntress, and her virgin train;
Nor envy Windsor. Pope's Windsor Forest.

Homer represents Diana with her quiver at her shoulder; but at the same time he describes her as an huntress. Broome

HU'NTSMAN, n. s. [hunt and man.]

1. One who delights in the chace.

Like as a huntsman, after weary chace,
Seeing the game escape from him away,
Sits down to rest him. Spenser's Sonnets.

Such game, whilst yet the world was new,
The mighty Nimrod did pursue:
What huntsman of our feeble race,
Or dogs, dare such a monster chace? Waller.

2. The servant whose office it is to manage the chace.

Apply this moral rather to the huntsman, that managed the chace, than to the master. L'Estrange's Fables.

HURLWIND. n. s. [hurl and wind.] A whirlwind; a violent gust. A word not in use.

Like scatter'd down by howling Eurus blown,
By rapid hurlwinds from his mansion thrown. Sandys.

HU'RLY. } n. s. [I have been told that this word owes its HU'RLYBURLY. } original to two neighbouring families named Hurly and Burly, or Hurleigh and Burleigh, which filled their part of the kingdom with contests and violence. If this account be rejected, the word must be derived from hurl, hurly, and burly, a ludicrous reduplication. Hurlade, French; hurlubrelu, inconsiderately.] Tumult, commotion, bustle.

Winds take the ruffian billows by the top,
That with the hurley death itself awakes. Shakesp. H. IV.

Poor discontents,
Which gape and rub the elbow at the news
Of hurlyburly innovation. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. 1.

Methinks, I see this hurly all on foot. Shakesp. K. John.

A. places were filled with tumult and hurlyburly, every man measured the danger by his own fear; and such a pitiful cry was in every place, as in cities presently to be besieged. Knolles

HURRICANE } n. f. [huracan, Spanish; ouragon, French.] A
HURRICANO } violent storm, such as is often experienced in the eastern hemisphere.

Blow winds, and crack your cheeks;
Your cataracts and hurricanes spout Shakesp. K. Lear.

A storm or hurricano, though but the force of air, makes a strange havock where it comes. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

A poet who had a great genius for tragedy, made every man and woman too in his plays flark raging mad, and was tempestuous and blustering; heaven and earth were coming together at every word; a mere hurricane from the beginning to the end. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

The ministers of state, who gave us law,
In corners with selected friends withdraw,
There, in deaf murmurs, solemnly are wise,
Whisp'ring like winds, ere hurricanes arise.
So, where our wide Numidian wastes extend,
Sudden th' impetuous hurricanes descend,
Whose through the air, in circling eddies play,
Tear up the sands, and sweep whole plains away. Addison.

To HURRY. v. a. [perhaps, to plunder, Saxon hurt was likewise a word used by the old Germans in urging their horses to speed; but seems the imperative of the verb.] To hasten, to put into precipitation or confusion; to drive confusedly

Your nobles will not hear you, but are gone
To offer service to your enemy,
And wild amazement hurries up and down
The little number of your doubtful friends.

Why such different species should not only mingle together, but also generate an animal, and yet that that hybridous production should not again generate, is to me a mystery. Ray.

Hydatides. n. f. [from ὑδωρ.] Little transparent bladders of water in any part, most common in dropsical persons, from a distention or rupture of the lymphducts; for they happen most usually in parts abounding with those vessels. Quincy.

All the water is contained in little bladders, adhering to the liver and peritoneum, known by the name of hydatides. Wiseman.

Hy'dra. n. f. [hydra, Latin.] A monster with many heads slain by Hercules: whence any multiplicity of evils is termed a hydra.

New rebellions raise
Their hydra heads, and the false North displays
Her broken league to imp her serpent wings. Milton.

More formidable hydra stands within,
Whose jaws with iron-teeth severely grin. Dryden's Æn.

Subdue
The hydra of the many-headed hissing crew. Dryden.

Hy'dragogues. n. f. [ὑδωρ and ἀγω; hydragogue, Fr.] Such medicines as occasion the discharge of watery humours, which is generally the case of the stronger cathartick, because they shake most forcibly by their vellications the bowels and their appendages, so as to squeeze out water enough to make the floods seem to be little else. Quincy.

Hydrau'lical. } adj. [from hydraulick.] Relating to the con-
Hydraulick. } veyance of water through pipes.

Among the engines in which the air is useful, pumps may be accounted not contemptible ones, and divers other hydraulick [illegible] Derham's Physico-Theology.

We have employed a virtuoso to make an hydraulick engine, in which a chymical liquor, resembling blood, is driven through elastick channels. Arbuthn. and Pope's Mart. Scriblerus.

Hydraulicks. n. f. [ὑδωρ, water, and αὐλος, a pipe.]

The science of conveying water through pipes or conduits.

Hydrocele. n. f. [ὑδροκηλη; hydrocele, Fr.] A watery rupture

Hydrocephalus. n. f. [ὑδωρ and κεφαλη.] A dropsy in the head

A hydrocephalus, or dropsy of the head, is only incurable when the serum is extravasated into the ventricles of the brain. Arbuthnot on Diet.

Hydrographer. n. f. [ὑδωρ and γραφω; hydrographe, Fr.]

[illegible]

It may be drawn from the writings of our hydrographer Boyle.

Hydrography. n. f. [ὑδωρ and γραφω; hydrographie, Fr.] Description of the watery part of the terraqueous globe.

Hy'dromancy. n. f. [ὑδωρ and μαντια; hydromantie, Fr.] Prediction by water.

Divination was invented by the Persians: there are four kinds of divination; hydromancy, pyromancy, aeromancy, and geomancy. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Hy'dromel. n. f. [ὑδωρ and μελι; hydromel, Fr.] Honey and water.

Hydromel is a drink prepared of honey, being one of the most pleasant and universal drinks the northern part of Europe affords, as well as one of the most ancient. Arbuthnot's Rules.

In fevers the aliments prescribed by Hippocrates were ptisans and cream of barley, hydromel, that is, honey and water, when there was no tendency to a delirium. Arbuthnot.

Hydro'meter n. f. [ὑδωρ and μετρον.] An instrument to measure the extent of water.

Hydro'metry. n. f. [ὑ[illegible] and μετρον.] The act of measuring the extent of water

Hydrophobia. n. f. [ὑδροφοβια; hydrophobie, Fr.] Dread of water

Among those dismal symptoms that follow the bite of a mad dog, the dread of water is the most remarkable. [illegible]

Hydro'pick } adj. [from hydrops, Latin.] Dropsical; diseased with extravasated water
Hydropical }

Carthamus heats the watery parts of the body; as urine and hydropical water Bacon's Nat. Hi.

The world's whole sap is sunk:
The general balm th' hydropick earth hath drunk;
Whither, as to the bedstreet, life is shrunk,
Dead and interr'd. Donne.

Some mens hydropick insatiableness learned to thirst the more, by how much more they drank. King Charles.

Hydropical swellings, if they be pure, are pellucid. Wiseman.

Every lust is a kind of hydropick distemper, and the more we drink the more we shall thirst. Tillotson's Sermons.

Hydropick wretches by degrees decay,
Growing the more, the more they waste away,
By their own ruins they augmented lye,
With thirst and heat amidst a deluge fry. Blackmore.

One sort of remedy he uses in dropsies, viz. the water of the hydropicks, which is a remedy for the disease. Arbuthnot.

Hydrostatical. adj. [ὑδωρ and στατικη.] Relating to hydrostaticks, taught by hydrostaticks

A human body forming in such a fluid, will never be reconcilable to this hydrostatical law: there will be always something lighter beneath, and something heavier above, because bone, the heaviest in specie, will be ever in the midst. Bentley.

Hydrostatically. adv. [from hydrostatical.] According to hydrostaticks.

The weight of all bodies around the earth is ever proportional to the quantity of their matter: for instance, a pound weight, examined hydrostatically, doth always contain an equal quantity of solid mass. Bentley's Sermons.

Hydrostaticks. n. f. [ὑδωρ and στατικη; hydrostatique, Fr.] The science of weighing fluids; weighing bodies in fluids.

Hydrotick. n. f. [ὑδωρ; hydrotique, French.] Purger of water or phlegm.

He seems to have been the first who divided purges into hydrotick and purgers of bile. Arbuthnot on Coins.

Hy'en. } n. f. [hyene, French; hyæna, Latin.] An animal like
Hyæ'na. } a wolf, said fabulously to imitate human voices.

I will weep when you are disposed to be merry, I will laugh like a hyen, when you are inclined to sleep. Shakespeare.

A wonder more astonishing would be true,
The hyena shews it, of a double kind
Varying the sexes in alternate years,
In one begets, and in another bears. Dryden's Fables.

The hyena was indeed well joined with the bever, as having also a bag in those parts, if thereby we understand the hyena odorata, or civet cat. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

The keen hyena, first of the fell. Thomson's Summer.

Hygrometer. n. f. [ὑγρος and μετρεω, hygrometre, French.] An instrument to measure the degrees of moisture.

A sponge, perhaps, might be a better hygrometer than the earth of the river. Arbuthnot on Air.

Hy'groscope. n. f. [ὑγρος and σκοπεω, hygroscope, Fr.] An instrument to shew the moisture and dryness of the air, and to measure and estimate the quantity of either extreme. Quincy.

Moisture in the air is discovered by hygroscopes. Arbuthnot.

HYPARCHICAL adj. [ὑπὸ and ἀρχὴ] Presiding over matter

HYM. n. f. A species of dog

Avaunt, you curs!
Mastiff, greyhound, mongrel grim,
Hound or spaniel, brache or hym;
Or bobtail tike, or trundle tail,
Tom will make him weep and wail. Shakesp. King Lear.

HY'MEN n. f. [Ὑμήν.

1. The god of marriage
2. The virginal membrane.

HYMENE'AL } n. f. [ὑμέναιος.] A marriage song.
HYMENE'AN }

And heav'nly choirs the hymenean sung. Milt. Par. Lost
For her the spouse prepares the bridal ring,
For her white virgins hymeneals sing Pope

HYMENE'AL. } adj. Pertaining to marriage
HYMENE'AN. }

The sisters heard, and seem'd the mirthful voice
A signal of her hymeneal choice. Pope's Odyssey.

HYMN. n. f. [hymne, Fr. ὕμνος.] An encomiastick song, or song of adoration to some superiour being.

As I earst, in praise of mine own dame,
So now in honour of thy mother dear,
An honourable hymn I eke should frame. Spenser
Our solemn hymns to sullen dirges change,
Our bridal flow'rs serve for a buried coarse. Shakespeare.
When steel grows
Soft as the parasite's silk, let hymns be made
An overture for the wars. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

There is an hymn sung; but the subject of it is always the praises of Adam, and Noah and Abraham, concluding ever with a thanksgiving for the nativity of our Saviour. Bacon.

Farewel, you happy shades,
Where angels first should practise hymns, and string
Their tuneful harps, when they to heav'n would sing Dryd.

To HYMN. v. a. [ὑμνέω.] To praise in song; to worship with hymns

To HYM v. n. To sing songs of adoration.

They touch'd their golden harps, and hymning prais'd
God and his works. Milton.
He had not left alive this patient saint,
This anvil of affronts, but sent him hence
To hold a peaceful branch of palm above,
And hymn it in the quire. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

HY'MNICK. adj. [ὑμνικὸς.] Relating to hymns.

He rounds the air, and breaks the hymnick notes
In birds, heav'n's choristers, organick throats;
Which, if they did not die, might seem to be
A tenth rank in the heavenly hierarchy. Donne.

To HYP. v. a [barbarously contracted from hypochondriack.] To make melancholy; to dispirit.

I have been, to the last degree, hypped since I saw you. Spect.

HY'PALLAGE n. f. [ὑπαλλαγή] A figure by which words change their cases with each other

HYPER. n. f. [A word barbarously curtailed by Prior from hypercritick.] A hypercritick, one more critical than necessity requires. Prior did not know the meaning of the word.

Criticks I read on other men,
And hypers upon them again Prior.

HYPERBOLA n. f. [hyperbole, Fr. ὑπερ and βάλλω.] In geometry, a section of a cone made by a plane, so that the axis of the section produced comes to the opposite leg of the cone, which in the parabola is parallel to it, and in the ellipsis intersects it. The axis of the hyperbolical section will meet also with the opposite side of the cone, when produced above the vertex. Harris

Had the velocities of the several planets been greater or less than they are, or had their distances from the sun, or the quantity of the sun's matter, and consequently his attractive power been greater or less than they are now, with the same velocities, they would not have revolved in concentrick circles, but have moved in hyperbola's very eccentrick. Bentley's Serm.

HY'PERBOLE n. f. [hyperbole, Fr. ὑπερβολὴ.] A figure in rhetorick by which any thing is increased or diminished beyond the exact truth: as, he runs faster than lightning. His possessions are fallen to dust. He was so gaunt, the case of a flagelet was a mansion for him. Shakesp.

Terms unsquar'd,
Which, from the tongue of roaring Typhon dropt,
Would seem hyperboles. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.
Taffata phrases, silken terms precise,
Accepted hyperboles, spruce affectation,
Figures pedantical, these Summer flies,
Have blown me full of maggot ostentation. Shakespeare

They were above the hyperboles, that fond poetry bestows upon its admired objects. Glanv. Scept. c. 1.

Hyperboles, so daring and so bold,
Disdaining bounds, are yet by rules control'd,
Above the clouds, but yet within our sight,
They mount with truth, and make a towring flight. Granv.

The common people understand raillery, or at least they will not take hyperboles in too literal a sense

HYPERBO'LICAL } adj [hyperbolique, French, from hyperbola.]
HYPERBO'LICK }

1. Belonging to the hyperbola; having the nature of an hyperbola.

Cancellated in the middle with squares, with triangles before, and behind with hyperbolick lines. Grew's Museum

The horny or pellucid coat of the eye riseth up, as a bubble, above the convexity of the white of the eye, and is of an hyperbolical or parabolical figure. Ray on the Creation

2. [From hyperbole.] Exaggerating or extenuating beyond fact.

It is parabolical, and probably hyperbolical, and therefore not to be taken in a strict sense. Boyle.

HYPERBO'LICALLY. adv. [from hyperbolical]

1. In form of an hyperbola.
2. With exaggeration or extenuation

Yet may all be saved, if we take it hyperbolically. Brown.

Scylla is seated upon a narrow mountain, which thrusts into the sea a steep high rock, and supervolically described by Homer as inaccessible. Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

HYPERBO'LIFORM adj [hyperbola and forma.] Having the form, or nearly the form of the hyperbola.

HYPERBO'REAN. n. f [hyperborien, French, hyperboreus, Lat.] Northern

HYPERCRI'TICK. n. f. [hypercritique, Fr. ὑπὲρ and κρίνω.] A critick exact or cautious beyond use or reason

Those hypercriticks in English poetry differ from the opinion of the Greek and Latin judges of antiquity, from the Italians and French, and from the general taste of all ages. Dryd.

HYPERCRI'TICAL adj. [from hypercritick.] Critical beyond necessity or use

We are far from imposing those nice and hypercritical punctilio's, which some astrologers oblige our gardeners to. Evelyn.

Such hypercritical readers will consider my business was to make a body of refined sayings, only taking care to produce them in the most natural manner Swift.

HYPE'RMETER. n. f [ὑπὲρ and μέτρον.] Any thing greater than the standard requires.

When a man rises beyond six foot, he is an hypermeter, and may be admitted into the tall club Addison's Guardian.

HYPERSARCO'SIS. n. f [ὑπερσαρκωσις, ὑπὲρ and σαρξ.] The growth of surgous or proud flesh.

Where the hypersarcosis was great, I sprinkled it with precipitate, whereby I more speedily freed the ulcer of its putrefaction Wiseman's Surgery.

HY'PHEN. n. f. [ὑφὲν.] A note of conjunction, as, vir-tue, e-vil.

HYPNO'TICK. n. f. [ὕπνος]. Any medicine that induces sleep

HYPOCHO'NDRES. n. f. [hypocondre, Fr. ὑποχόνδριον.] The two regions lying on each side the cartilago ensiformis, and those of the ribs, and the tip of the breast, which have in one the liver, and in the other the spleen. Quincy.

The blood moving too slowly through the celiack and mesenterick arteries, produce various complaints in the lower bowels and hypochondres, from whence such persons are called hypochondriack. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

HYPOCHONDRI'ACAL } adj [hypocondriaque, French, from HYPOCHONDRI'ACK } hypochondres]

1. Melancholy, disordered in the imagination.

Socrates laid down his life in attestation of that most fundamental truth, the belief of one God, and yet he's not recorded either as fool or hypochondriack. Decay of Piety.

2. Producing melancholy

Cold sweats are many times mortal, and always suspected; as in great fears, and hypochondriacal passions, being a relaxation or forsaking of the spirits. Bacon's Nat. History.

HY'POCIST. n. f. [ὑπόκιστις, hypociste, French.]

Hypocist is an inspissated juice in large flat masses, considerably hard and heavy, of a fine shining black colour, when broken. It is brought from the Levant, sometimes from France, and other parts of Europe. The stem of the plant, from which it is produced, is thick and fleshy, and, what is singular, much thicker at the top than towards the bottom. The fruits contain a tough gummous liquor, which are gathered before they are ripe, and the juice is expressed, then evaporated over a gentle fire, formed into cakes, and dried in the sun. It is an astringent medicine of considerable power.

Hill's Mat. Med

HYPO'CRISY n. f [hypocrisie, Fr. ὑποκρισις] Dissimulation with regard to the moral or religious character.

Next stood hypocrisy with holy leer,
Soft smiling and demurely looking down;
But hid the dagger underneath the gown. Dryden's Fables.

Hypocrisy is much more eligible than open infidelity and vice: it wears the livery of religion, and is cautious of giving scandal; nay, continued disguises are too great a constraint, men would leave off their vices, rather than undergo the toil of practising them in private Swift.

HY'POCRITE. n. f. [hypocrite, French, ὑποκρίτης.] A dissembler in morality or religion.

He heartily prays some occasion may detain us longer. I dare swear he is no hypocrite, but prays from his heart. South

A wise man hateth not the law; but he that is an hypocrite therein, is as a ship in a storm. Ecclus. xxxiii. 3.

Fair hypocrite, you seek to cheat in vain;
Your silence argues, you ask time to reign. Dryden.

The making religion necessary to interest might increase hypocrisy; but if one in twenty should be brought to true piety, and nineteen be only hypocrites, the advantage would still be great. Swift.

Beware, ye honest [illegible]
Suffices virtue; but may hypocrites,
Who filly speak one thing, another think,
Hateful as hell, still pleas'd unwarn'd drink on,
And through intemp'rance grow a white sincere. Pr[illegible]

HYPOCRI'TICAL. } adj. [from hypocrite.] Dissembling, sur-
HYPOCRI'TICK. } reptitious, appearing differently from the reality.

Now you are confessing your enormities; I know it by that hypocritical, down-cast look Dryden's Spanish Friar.

Whatever virtues may appear in him, they will be esteemed an hypocritical imposture on the world; and in his retired pleasures, he will be presumed a libertine. Rogers's Sermons.

Let others skrew their hypocritick face. Swift.

HYPOCRI'TICALLY adv. [from hypocritical.] With dissimulation; without sincerity; falsely.

Simeon and Levi spake not only falsely, but insidiously, nay hypocritically, abusing at once their proselytes and their religion. Government of the Tongue.

HYPOGA'STRICK. adj. [hypogastrique, French, ὑπὸ and γαστὴρ.] Seated in the lower part of the belly.

The swelling we supposed to rise from an effusion of serum through all the hypogastrick arteries. Wiseman's Surgery.

HYPOGE'UM n. s. [ὑπὸ and γῆ.] A name which the ancient architects gave to all the parts of a building that were under ground, as cellars and vaults Harris

HYPOSTA'SIS. n. s. [hypostase, French; ὑπόστασις.]

1. Distinct substance.
2. Personality. A term used in the doctrine of the Holy Trinity.

The oneness of our Lord Jesus Christ, referring to the several hypostases in the one eternal, individible, divine nature, and the eternity of the Son's generation, and his co-eternity and consubstantiality with the Father, are assertions equivalent to those before comprised in the ancient more simple article. Hammond on Fundamentals.

HYPOSTA'TICAL. adj. [hypostatique, French, from hypostasis.]

1. Constitutive, constituent as distinct ingredients.

Let our Carneades warn men not to subscribe to the grand doctrine of the chymists, touching their three hypostatical principles, 'till they have a little examined it. Boyle.

HYPOTE'NUSE n. s. [hypotenuse, Fr. ὑποτείνουσα.] The line that subtends the right angle of a right-angled triangle, the subtense.

The square of the hypotenuse in a right-angled triangle, is equal to the squares of the two other sides. Locke.

HYPO'THESIS n. s. [hypothese, Fr. ὑπόθεσις.] A supposition; a system formed upon some principle not proved.

The mind casts and turns itself variously from one thing to another, 'till at length it brings all the ends of a long and various hypothesis together; sees how one part coheres with another, and so clears off all the appearing contrarieties that seemed to be cross, and make the whole intelligible. South's Serm.

With imagin'd sovereignty
Lord of his new hypothesis he reigns
He reigns how long? 'tis all some vulgar rise,
And he too, mighty thoughtful, mighty wise,
Studies new lines, and other circles feigns. P

HYPOTHE'TICAL. } adj. [hypothetique, Fr. from hypothesis.] In-HYPOTHE'TICK. } cluding a supposition, conditional.

HYSTE'RICKS. n. s. [ὑστερικὸς.] Fits of women, supposed to proceed from disorders in the womb.

I.

I Is in Engliſh conſidered both as a vowel and conſonant though, ſince the vowel and conſonant differ in their form as well as ſound, they may be more properly accounted two letters.

I vowel has a long ſound, as fine, thine, which is uſually marked by an e final; and a ſhort ſound, as fin, thin. Prefixed to e it makes a diphthong of the ſame ſound with the ſoft i, or double e, ee thus field, yield, are ſpoken as feeld, yeeld, except friend, which is ſpoken frend. Subjoined to a or e it makes them long, as faint, neigh; and to o makes a mingled ſound, which approaches more nearly to the true notion of a diphthong, or ſound compoſed of the ſounds of two vowels, than any other combination of vowels in the Engliſh language, as oil, coin. The ſound of i before another i, and at the end of a word, is always expreſſed by y.

J conſonant has invariably the ſame ſound with that of g in grant; as jade, jet, jilt, jolt juſt.

I. pronoun perſonal. [ik, Gothick, ic, Saxon, ich, Dutch.]

I, gen me, plural we; gen. us.

There is none greater in this houſe than I. Gen. xxxix. 9.

Be of good cheer, it is I; be not afraid. Mat xiv. 27.

What ſhall I do to be for ever known,
And make the age to come my own?
I ſhall like beaſts or common people dye,
Unleſs you write my elegy. Cowley.

Hence, and make room for me. Cowley.

When chance of buſineſs parts us two,
What do our ſouls, I wonder, do? Cowley

Of that book you have given us a large earneſt. Cowley.

Thus, having paſs'd the night in fruitleſs pain,
I to my longing friends return again. Dryden's Æn.

2. Me is uſed in the following paſſage written for I.

There is but one man whom ſhe can have, and that is me. Clariſſa.

3. I is more than once in Shakeſpeare written for ay, or yes.

Hath Romeo ſlain himſelf? Say thou but I,
And that bare vowel, I, ſhall poiſon more
Than the death darting eye of cockatrice Shakeſpeare.

Did your letters pierce the queen?
—I, ſir; ſhe took 'em and read 'em in my preſence,
And now and then an ample tear trill'd down. Shakeſpeare.

To JABBER. v. n. [jabberen, Dutch.] To talk idly; to prate without thinking, to chatter

So hills amid the air encounter'd hills,
Hurl'd to and fro with jaculation dire. Milt. Parad. Loſt.

JADE. n. ſ. [The etymology of this word is doubtful. Skinner derives it from gaud, a goad, or ſpur.]

1. A horſe of no ſpirit; a hired horſe, a worthleſs nag.

Ass, what wights are theſe that load my heart?
I am as dull as Winter-ſtarved ſheep,
Tir'd as a jade in overloaden cart. Sidney.

When they ſhould endure the bloody ſpur,
They fall their creſt, and, like deceitful jades,
Sink in the tryal. Shakeſp. Julius Cæſar.

The horſemen ſit like fixed candleſticks,
With torch-ſtaves in their hand, and their poor jades
Lob down their heads, dropping the head and hips. Shakeſ.

To other regions
France is a ſtable, we that dwell in't jades;
Therefore to th' war. Shakeſ. All's well that ends well.

Have I ſeen with armed heel
A knight be bride a commonweal,
While ſtill the more he kick'd and ſpurr'd,
The leſs the ſullen jade has ſtirr'd. Hudibras, p. I.

The plaiſing came upon the trial to prove thoſe to be jades that made ſport with him. L'Eſtrange.

Haſe ſteps but help them to renew their race,
As, after ſtumbling, jades will mend their pace. Pope.

2. A ſorry woman. A word of contempt noting ſometimes age, but generally vice.

Shall theſe, theſe old jades, paſt the flower
Of youth, that you have, paſs you. Chapman's Iliads.

But ſhe, the cunning'ſt jade alive,
Says, 'tis the ready way to thrive,
By ſharing female bounties. Stepney.

Certain, huſſy now will I perſonate this young jade, and diſcover the intrigue. Southerne's Innocent Adultery.

In diamonds, pearl, and rich brocades,
She ſhines the firſt of batter'd jades,
And flatters in her pride. Swift.

3. A young woman: in irony and ſlight contempt.

You ſee now and then ſome handſome young jades among them: the fiats have very often white teeth and black eyes. Add.

JADE. n. ſ. A ſpecies of ſtone.

The jade is a ſpecies of the jaſper, and of extreme hardneſs. Its colour is compoſed of a pale blueiſh grey, or aſh-colour, and a pale green, not ſimple and uniform, but intermixed. It appears dull and coarſe on the ſurface, but it takes a very elegant and high poliſh. It is found in the Eaſt Indies, and is much uſed by the Turks for handles of ſabres. It is ſo highly eſteemed by the Indians as to be called the divine ſtone: they wear it externally as a remedy for the gravel, and an amulet to preſerve them from the bite of venomous animals. Hill's Materia Medica.

To JADE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To tire; to harraſs, to diſpirit; to weary.

With his banners, and his well-paid ranks,
The ne'er-yet-beaten horſe of Parthia
We've jaded out o' th' field. Shakeſp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

It is good and ſcourſe to vary and intermingle ſpeech of the preſent occaſion with arguments, for it is a dull thing to tire and jade any thing too faſt. Bacon's Eſſays.

If fleet dragon's progeny at laſt
Proves jaded, and in frequent matches caſt,
No favour for the ſtation we retain,
And no reſpect for the degenerate ſtrain. Dryden's Juvenal.

The mind once jaded, by an attempt above its power, is very hardly brought to exert its force again. Locke.

There are ſeaſons when the brain is overtired or jaded with ſtudy or thinking, or upon ſome other accounts animal nature may be languid or cloudy, and unfit to aſſiſt the ſpirit in meditation. Watts's Logick.

2. To overbear, to cruſh, to degrade; to harraſs, as a horſe that is ridden too hard.

If we have thus tamely,
To be thus jaded by a piece of ſcarlet,
Farewel nobility. Shakeſpeare's Henry VIII.

3. To employ in vile offices.

The honourable blood
Muſt not be ſhed by ſuch a jaded groom. Shakeſ. Hen. VI.

4. To ride, to rule with tyranny.

I do not now fool myſelf, to let imagination jade me, for every reaſon excites us. Shakeſp. Twelfth Night.

To JADE. v. n. To look ſluggiſh, to ſink.

Many offer at the effects of friendſhip, but they do not laſt: they are promiſing in the beginning, but they fail and jade and tire in the proſecution. South's Sermons.

JA'DISH adj. [from jade.]

1. Vicious; bad, as an horſe.

That horſed us on their backs, to ſhow us
A jadiſh trick at laſt, and threw us. Hudibras, p.

When once the people get the jadiſh trick
Of throwing off their king, no ruler's ſafe. Southern.

2. Unchaſte, incontinent.

'Tis to no boot to be jealous of a woman, for if the humour takes her to be jadiſh, not all the locks and ſpies in turn can keep her honeſt. L'Eſtrange.

To JAGG. v. a. [gagner, Welſh.] To cut into indentures; to cut into teeth like thoſe of a ſaw.

Some leaves are round, ſome long, ſome ſquare, and many jagged on the ſides. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

The jagging of pinks and gilliflowers is like the inequality of oak-leaves; but they never have any ſmall pearl purls. Bac.

The banks of that ſea muſt be jagged and torn by the impetuous aſſaults, or the ſilent underminings of waves, violent rains muſt waſh down earth from the tops of mountains. Bent.

An alder-tree is one among the leſſer trees, whoſe younger branches are ſoft, and whoſe leaves are jagged. Mort.

JAGG. n. ſ. [from the verb.] A protuberance or denticulation.

The figure of the leaves is divided into ſo many jaggs or eſcallops, and curiouſly indented round the edges. Ray.

Take off all the ſtaring ſtraws, twigs, and jaggs in the hive, and make them as ſmooth as poſſible. Mort. Huſbandry.

JA'GGY adj. [from jagg.] Uneven; denticulated.

His tow'ring creſt was glorious to behold
His ſhoulders and his ſides were ſcaled with gold,
Three tongues he brandiſhed when he charg'd his foes
His teeth ſtood jaggy in three dreadful rows. Dryden.

Amid' thoſe angles, infinitely ſtrain'd,
They joyful leave their jaggy ſalts behind. Thomſ. Autumn.

JA'GGEDNESS. n. ſ. [from jagged.] The ſtate of being denticulated, unevenneſs.

Firſt draw rudely your leaves, making them plain with your coal or lead, before you give them their veins or jaggedneſs. Peacham on Drawing.

JAIL n. ſ. [geol, French.] A gaol, a priſon, a place where criminals are confined. See GAOL. It is written either way, but commonly by latter writers jail.

Away with the dotard, to the jail with him. Shakeſp.

A dependant upon him paid ſix pound ready money, which, poor man, he lived to repent in a jail. Clarendon.

He ſigh'd and turn'd his eyes, becauſe he knew
'Twas but a larger jail he had in view. Dryden.

One jail did all the criminals reſtrain,
Which now the walls of Rome can ſcarce contain. Dryden.

JA'ILBIRD n. ſ. [jail and bird.] One who has been in a jail.

JA'ILER n. ſ. [from jail.] A gaoler; the keeper of a priſon.

Seeking many means to ſpeak with her, and ever kept from it, as well becauſe ſhe ſhunned it, feeling and diſdaining his mind, as becauſe of her jealous jailers. Sidney.

This is as a jailer, to bring forth
Some monſtrous malefactor. Shak. Ant. and Cleopatra.

His pow'r to hollow caverns is confin'
There let him reign, the jailer of the wind,
With hoarſe commands his breathing ſubjects call,
And boaſt and bluſter in his empty hall. Dryden's Æn.

Palamon, the priſoner knight,
Reſtleſs for woe, aroſe before the light
And with his jailer's leave, deſires to breathe
An air more wholeſome than the damp beneath. Dryden.

JAKES. n. f. [Of uncertain etymology.] A house of office:

I will tread this unbolted villain into mortar, and daub the walls of jakes with him. Shakespeare's King Lear

Their fordid avarice rakes
In excrements, and hires the very jakes. Dryden's Juvenal

Some have fished the very jakes for papers left there by men of wit. Swift.

JA'LAP. n. f. [jalap, French; jalapium, low Latin.]

Jalap is a firm and solid root, of a wrinkled surface, and generally cut into slices, heavy and hard to break; of a faintish smell, and of an acrid and nauseous taste. It was not known in Europe 'till after the discovery of America, and had its name jalapium, or jalapa, from Xalapa, a town in New Spain, in the neighbourhood of which it was discovered; though it is now principally brought from the Madeiras. It is an excellent purgative in all cases where serous humours are to be evacuated. Hill's Mat. Med.

JAM. n. f. [I know not whence derived.] A conserve of fruits boiled with sugar and water.

JAMB. n. f. [jambe, French.] Any supporter on either side, as the posts of a door.

No timber is to be laid within twelve inches of the foreside of the chimney jambs. Mason's Mech. Exer.

IAMBICK. n. f. [iambique, French; iambicus, Latin.] Verses composed of iambick feet, or a short and long syllable alternately: used originally in satire, therefore taken for satire.

In thy felonious heart though venom lies,
It does but touch thy Irish pen, and dies:
Thy genius calls thee not to purchase fame
In keen iambicks, but mild anagram. Dryden.

To JA'NGLE. v. n. [jangler, French. Skinner.] To altercate; to quarrel, to bicker in words.

Good wits will be jangling; but, gentles agree,
This civil war of wits were much better us'd
On Navarre and his book-men. Shak. Love's Labour Lost.

So far am I glad it did so sort,
As this their jangling I esteem a sport. Shakespeare.

There is no errour which hath not some appearance of probability resembling truth, which when men, who study to be singular, find out, straining reason, they then publish to the world matter of contention and jangling. Raleigh.

To JA'NGLE. v. a. To make to sound untuneable.

Now see that noble and that sovereign reason,
Like sweet bells jangled out of tune and harsh. Shak. Hamlet.

'Ere Gothick forms were known in Greece,
And in our verse 'ere monkish rhimes
Had jangl'd their fantastick chimes. Prior.

JA'NGLER. n. f. [from the verb.] A wrangling, chattering, noisy fellow.

JA'NIZARY. n. f. [A Turkish word.] One of the guards of the Turkish emperor.

His grand vizier, presuming to invest
The chief imperial city of the West,
With the first charge compel'd in haste to rise;
The standards lost, and janizaries slain,
Render the hopes he gave his master vain. Waller.

JA'NNOCK. n. f. [probably a corruption of bannock.] Oatbread. A northern word.

JA'NTY. adj. [corrupted from gentil, French.] Showy; flattering.

JA'NUARY. n. f. [Januarius, Latin.] The first month of the year, from Janus, to whom it was among the Romans consecrated.

January is clad in white, the colour of the earth at this time, blowing his nails. This month had the name from Janus, painted with two faces, signifying providence. Peacham.

JAPAN. n. f. [from Japon in Asia, where figured work was originally done.] Work varnished and raised in gold and colours.

The poor girl had broken a large japan glass, of great value, with a stroke of her brush. Swift.

To JAPA'N. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To varnish, and embellish with gold and raised figures.

For not the desk with silver nails,
Nor bureau of expence,
Nor standish well japan'd, avails
To writing of good sense Swift.

2. To black shoes. A low phrase.

The god of fire
Among these gen'rous presents joins his part,
And aids with soot the new japanning art. Gay's Trivia.

JAPA'NNER. n. f. [from japan.]

1. One skilled in japan work.
2. A shoeblacker.

The poor have the same itch;
They change their weekly barber, weekly news,
Prefer a new japanner to their shoes. Pope's Horace.

To JAR. v. n. [from corre, anger, Saxon; or guerre, war, French; or garren, old Teutonick, to clamour.]

1. To strike together with a kind of short rattle.

A hollow groan, a murm'ring wind arose;
The rings of iron, that on the doors were hung,
Sent out a jarring sound, and harshly rung. Dryden.

My knees tremble with the jarring blow. Gay.

2. To strike or sound untuneably.

O, you kind gods
Cure this great breach in his abused nature!
Th' untun'd and jarring senses, O, wind up,
Of this child-changed father. Shakesp. King Lear.

I perceive you delight not in musick.
—Not a whit, when it jars so. Shakespeare.

A string may jar in the best master's hand,
And the most skilful archer miss his aim. Raleigh.

He keeps his temper'd mind, serene and pure,
And every passion aptly harmoniz'd
Amid' a jarring world. Thomson's Summer.

3. To clash; to interfere; to act in opposition; to be inconsistent.

At last, though long, our jarring notes agree. Shakesp.

For orders and degrees
Jar not with liberty, but well consist. Milt. Parad. Lost.

Venabas concluded his report
A jarring murmur hiss'd the factious court.
As when a torrent rolls with rapid force,
The flood, constrain'd within a scanty space,
Roars horrible Dryden.

4. To quarrel; to dispute.

When those renowned noble peers of Greece,
Through stubborn pride, among themselves do jar,
Forgetful of the famous golden fleece,
Then Orpheus with his harp their strife did bar. Spenser.

They must be sometimes ignorant of the means conducing to those ends, in which alone they can vary and oppose each other. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

JAR. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A kind of rattling vibration of sound.

In r, the tongue is held fully at its whole length, by the force of the muscles; so as when the impulse of breath strikes upon the end of the tongue, where it finds passage, it shakes and agitates the whole tongue, whereby the sound is affected with a trembling jar. Holder's Elements of Speech.

2. Clash; discord; debate.

He maketh war, he maketh peace again,
And yet his peace is but continual jar:
O miserable men, that to him subject are! Spenser.

Nath'less, my brother, since we passed are
Unto this point, we will appease our jar. Hubberd's Tale.

Force would be right; or rather, right and wrong,
Between whose endless jar justice resides,
Would lose their names, and so would justice too. Shakesp.

3. A state in which a door unfastened may strike the post, half opened.

The chaffering with dissenters, and dodging about this or t'other ceremony, is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them a jar, by which no more than one can get in at a time. Swift.

4. [Giarre, Italian.] An earthen vessel.

About the upper part of the jar there appeared a good number of bubbles. Boyle.

He mead for cooling drink prepares,
Of virgin honey in the jars. Dryden.

Warriors welter on the ground,
Whilst empty jars the dire defeat resound. Gay.

JARDES. n. f. [French.] Hard callous tumours in horses, a little below the bending of the ham on the outside. This distemper in time will make the horse halt, and grow so painful as to cause him to pine away, and become light bellied. It is most common to managed horses, that have been kept too much upon their haunches. Farrier's Dict.

JARGON. n. f. [jargon, French; gerigonza, Spanish.] Unintelligible talk, gibberish.

Nothing is clearer than mathematical demonstration, yet let one, who is altogether ignorant in mathematicks, hear it, and he will hold it to be plain fustian or jargon. Bramball.

From this last trial again what knowledge flows?
Just as much, perhaps, as shows
That all his predecessor's rules
Were empty cant, all jargon of the schools Prior.

During the usurpation an invasion of enthusiastick jargon prevailed in every writing. Swift.

JA'RGONELLE. n. f. See PEAR, of which it is a species.

Others, from the wall, defer
With dart and javelin, ſtones and ſulph'rous fire;
On each hand ſlaughter and gigantick deeds. Milt. Pa. Loſt

She ſhakes her myrtle javelin; and, behind,
Her Lycian quiver dances in the wind. Dryden's Æn.

Flies the javelin ſwifter to its mark,
Launch'd from the vigour of a Roman arm? Addiſ. Cato.

JAUNDICE n. ſ. [jaunice, Fr.] A diſeaſe cauſed by obſtructions of the glands of the liver, which prevents the gall being duly ſeparated by them from the blood, and ſometimes, eſpecially in hard drinkers, they are ſo indurated as never after to be opened, and ſtraighten the motion of the blood ſo much through that veſſel as to make it divert with a force great enough into the gallrick arteries, which go off from the hepatick, to break through them, and drain into the ſtomach; ſo that vomiting of blood, in this diſtemper, is a fatal ſymptom. Quincy.

Why ſhould a man, whoſe blood is warm within,
Sit like his grandſire cut in alabaſter?
Sleep when he wakes, and creep into the jaundice
By being peeviſh? Shakeſp. Merchant of Venice.

What grief hath ſet the jaundice on your cheeks? Shak.

Thoſe were thy thoughts, and thou couldſt judge aright,
'Till intereſt made a jaundice in thy ſight. Dryden.

The eyes of a man in the jaundice make yellow obſervations on every thing, and the ſoul, tinctured with any paſſion, diffuſes a falſe colour over the real appearances of things. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

JA'UNDICED adj. [from jaundice.] Infected with the jaundice.

All ſeems infected, that th' infected ſpy,
As all looks yellow to the jaundic'd eye. Pope

To JAUNT. v. n. [janter, French.] To wander here and there, to buſtle about. It is now always uſed in contempt or levity.

1. The bone of the mouth in which the teeth are fixed.

A generation whoſe teeth are as ſwords, and their jaw teeth as knives, to devour the poor. Prov. xxx. 14.

The jaw bones, hearts, and galls of pikes are very medicinable. Walton's Angler.

Piſo, who probably ſpeaks Ariſtotle's meaning, ſaith that the crocodile doth not only move his upper jaw, but that his nether jaw is unmoveable. Grew's Muſæum.

More formidable hydra ſtands within,
Whoſe jaws with iron teeth ſeverely grin. Dryden's Æn.

2. The mouth.

My tongue cleaveth to my jaws, and thou haſt brought me into the duſt of death. Pſ. xxii.

My bended hook ſhall pierce their ſlimy jaws. Shakeſpeare

A ſmeary foam works o'er my gnawing jaws,
And utmoſt anguiſh ſhakes my labouring frame. Id.

JAY n. ſ. [named from its cry. Skinner.] A bird.

Two ſharp winged ſheers,
Deck'd with diverſe plumes, like painted jays,
Were fixed at his back, to cut his airy ways. Fairy Queen

We'll uſe this unwholeſome humidity, this groſs watry pumpion—we'll teach him to know turtles from jays. Shakeſp.

What, is the jay more precious than the lark,
Becauſe his feathers are more beautiful? Shakeſpeare

I am highly delighted to ſee the jay or the thruſh hopping about my walks. Spectator.

Admires the jay, the inſects gilded wings,
Or hears the hawk, when Philomela ſings. Pope.

JA'ZEL. n. ſ. A precious ſtone of an azure or blue colour. Dict.

ICE. n. ſ. [ıꝑ, Saxon; eyſe, Dutch.]

1. Water or other liquor made ſolid by cold.

You are no ſurer, no,
Than is the coal of fire upon the ice,
Or hailſtone in the ſun. Shakeſpeare's Coriolanus.

Thou art all ice, thy kindneſs freezes. Shakeſp. R. III.

If I ſhould aſk whether ice and water were two diſtinct ſpecies of things, I doubt not but I ſhould be anſwered in the affirmative. Locke.

2. Concreted ſugar.

3. To break the ICE. To make the firſt opening to any attempt.

If you break the ice, and do this feat,
Achieve the elder, ſet the younger free
For our acceſs, whoſe hap ſhall be to have her,
Will not ſo graceleſs be to be ingrate. Shakeſpeare.

Thus have I broken the ice to an explanation, for the lively repreſentation of floods and rivers neceſſary for our painters and poets. Peacham on Drawing.

After he'd a while look'd wiſe,
At laſt broke ſilence and the ice. Hudibras, p.

To ICE. v. a. [from the noun.]

Sometimes to do me service. nine or ten times
I thought to've jerk'd him here under the ribs. Shakesp. Otuel.
Bathings heavy, dry, obtuse,
Only dulness can produce;
While a little gentle jerking
Sets the spirits all a working. Swift.

To JERK v. n. To strike up; to accost eagerly. This seems to be the meaning in this place, but is mere cant.
Nor blush, though he some grave acquaintance meet;
But, proud of being known, will jerk and greet. Dryden.

JERK. n. s [from the verb.]
1. A smart quick lash.
Contemn the silly taunts of fleering buffoonry; and the jerks of that wit, that is but a kind of confident folly Glanv.
Wit is not the jerk or sting of an epigram, nor the seeming contradiction of a poor anithesis, neither is it so much the morality of a grave sentence, affected by Lucan, but more sparingly used by Virgil. Dryden.
2. A sudden spring, a quick jolt that shocks or starts.
Wat ran Tawney, the abbot's churl,
His jade gave him a jerk,
As he would have his rider hurl
His hood after the kirk. Ben. Johnson's Underwoods.
Lobsters use their tails as fins, wherewith they commonly swim backwards by jerks or springs, reaching ten yards at once. Grew.

JE'RKEN n. s. [cyrtelkin, Saxon] A jacket; a short coat, a [illegible]
A man may wear it on both sides, like a leather jerkin. Shak
Mistress Line, is not this my jerkin? Now is the jerkin under the line. now, jerkin, you are like to lose your hair, and prove a bald jerkin. Shakespeare's Tempest.
Unless we should expect that nature should make jerkins and stockings grow out of the ground, what could she do better than afford us so fit materials for clothing as the wool of the sheep? Adams's Antidote against Atheism.
Imagine an ambassador presenting himself in a poor frize jerkin, and tattered cloaths, certainly he would have but small audience. South's Sermons.
Then strip thee of thy carnal jerkin,
And give thy outward fellow a ferkin. Hudibras, p. ii
I walked into the sea, in my leathern jerkin, about an hour before high water. Gulliver's Travels.

JERKIN. n. s A kind of hawk. Ainsworth. This should be written gyrkin.

JE'RSEY. n. s. [from the island of Jersey, where much yarn is spun.] Fine yarn of wool

JESS. n. s. [gette, French; getto, Italian] Short straps of leather tied about the legs of a hawk, with which she is held on the fist. Hanmer

If I prove her haggard,
Though that my jesses were her dear heartstrings,
I'd whistle her off, and let her down the wind
To prey at fortune Shakespeare's Othello.

JE'SSAMINE, n. f. [See JASMINE.] A fragrant flower.

Her goodly bosom, like a strawberry [illegible],
Her neck, like to a bunch of cul'ambines,
Her breast like lilies, ere their leaves be shed;
Her nipples, like young blossom'd jessamines Spenser.

JERU'SALEM Artichokes. n. f. Sunflower, of which they are a species.

Jerusalem artichokes are increased by small off-sets, and by quartering the roots. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To JEST. v. n. [gestitudo, Latin.] To divert or make merry by words or actions.

Jest not with a rude man, lest thy ancestors be disgrac Ecclus. vi. 4.

Fear you the boar, and go so unprovided?
—You may jest on; but I do not like these several councils. Shakesp. Rich. III.

JEST n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Any thing ludicrous, or meant only to raise laughter.

But is this true, or is it else your pleasure,
Like pleasant travellers to break a jest
Upon the company you overtake? Shakespeare.

As for jests, there be certain things which ought to be privileged from it, namely, religion, matters of state, and great persons. Bacon's Essays.

No man ought to have the less reverence for the principles of religion, or for the holy Scriptures, because idle and profane wits can break jests upon them. Tillotson's Sermons.

He had turn'd all tragedy to jest. Pr

2. The object of jests; laughing stock.

If I suspect without cause, why then make sport at me; then let me be your jest, I deserve it. Shak. Mer. W. of Wind.

3. Manner of doing or speaking feigned, not real, ludicrous, not serious, game, not earn[illegible]

That high All-seer, which I dallied with,
Hath turn'd my feigned prayer on my head,

JE'STER. n. f. [from jest.]

1. One given to merriment and pranks.

The skipping king, he rambled up and down
With shallow jesters, and rash bavin wits
Soon kindled, and soon burnt. Shakesp. Henry IV.

2. One given to sarcasm.

Now, as a jester, I accost you,
Which never yet one friend has lost you. Swift.

3. Buffoon; jackpudding.

Another sort of like loose fellows do pass up and down, amongst gentlemen, by the name of jesters; but are, indeed, notable rogues, and partakers not only of many stealths, but also privy to many traitorous practices. Spenser on Ireland.

JET n. f. [ʒagat, Saxon; get, Dutch; gagates, Latin.]

1. Jet is a very beautiful fossil, of a firm and very even structure, and of a smooth surface, found in masses, seldom of a great size, lodged in clay. It is of a fine deep black colour, having a grain resembling that of wood. The ancients recommend jet in medicine; but it is now used only in toys. It is confounded with cannal-coal, which has no grain, and is extremely hard; and the jet is but moderately so. Hill.

Black, forsooth; coal-black, as jet Shakesp. Henry VI.

There is more difference between thy flesh and hers, than between jet and ivory. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

The bottom clear,
Now laid with many a set
Of seed-pearl, ere she bath'd her there,
Was known as black as jet. Drayton.

One of us in glass is set,
One of us you'll find in jet. Swift.

Under flowing jet,
Of sunny ringlets, or of curling brown,
The neck bright shaded Thomson's Summer.

2. [Jet, French.] A spout or shoot of water.

Prodigious 'tis, that one attractive ray
Should this way bend, the next an adverse way!
For should th' unseen magnetick jets descend
All the same way, they could not gain their end.
Blackmore's Creation.

Thus the small jet, which lusty hands unlock,
Spurts in the gard'ner's eyes who turns the cock. Pope.

3. A yard. Obsolete.

What orchard unrobbed escapes?
Or pullet dare walk in their jet. Tusser's Husbandry.

To JET. v. n. [jetter, French.]

1. To shoot forward; to shoot out; to intrude; to jut out.

Think you not how dangerous
It is to jet upon a prince's right? Shakesp. Tit. Andr.

2 To strut; to agitate the body by a proud gait.

Contemplation makes a rare turkey-cock of him; how he jets under his advanced plumes. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

3. To jolt, to be shaken. [Jetter, French.]

Upon the jetting of a hackney-coach she was thrown out of the hinder seat against a bar of iron in the forepart. Wiseman.

JETSAM } n. f. [jetter, French.] Goods or other things
JE'TSON. } which, having been cast over board in a storm, or after shipwreck, are thrown upon the shore, and belong to the lord admiral. Bailey.

JE'TTY. adj. [from jet.]

1. Made of jet.

2. Black as jet.

The people about Cape Negro, Cefala, and Madagascar, are of a jetty black. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Her hair
Adown her shoulders loosely lay display'd,
And in her jetty curls ten thousand Cupids play'd. Prior.

Negroes black, and Mercamante brown,
Veil'd for his love in jetty bows shall mourn. Pope's Dunciad.

JE'WEL. n. f. [joyau, French; jeweelen, Dutch.]

1. Any ornament of great value, used commonly of such as are adorned with precious stones.

Here, wear this jewel for me; 'tis my picture. Shak.

They found him dead, and cast into the streets,
An empty casket, where the jewel, life,
By some damn'd hand was robb'd and ta'en away. Shakesp.

The pleasure of the religious man is an easy and a portable pleasure, such an one as he carries about in his bosom, without alarming either the eye or envy of the world: a man putting all his pleasures into this one, is like a traveller's putting all his goods into one jewel. South.

2. A precious stone, a gem.

Jewels too, stones, rich and precious stones,
Stol'n by my daughter! Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

Proud fame's imperial seat
With jewels blaz'd, magnificently great. Pope.

3. A name of fondness; an appellation of tender regard.

Bid farewel to your sisters.

JE'WELLER. n. f. [from jewel.] One who traffics in precious stones.

These grains were as like little dice as if they had been made by a jeweller. Boyle.

The price of the market to a jeweller in his trade is one thing; but the intrinsick worth of a thing to a man of sense is another L'Estrange.

I will turn jeweller. I shall then deal in diamonds, and all sorts of rich stones. Addison.

JEWS-EARS. n. f. [from its resemblance of the human ear. Skinner.] A fungus, tough and thin, and naturally, while growing, of a crumpled figure, like a flat and variously hollowed cup; from an inch to two inches in length, and about two thirds of its length in breadth. Its sides are undulated, and in many places run into the hollow, so as to represent in it ridges like those of the human ear. Its substance is tough like leather, and its colour very dark. It is light when dry, of a disagreeable smell and nauseous taste. It generally grows on the lower parts of the trunks of elder-trees, especially where they are decaying. It is not much used by physicians; but the common people cure themselves of sore throats with a decoction of it in milk. Hill's Mat. Med.

An herb called jews-ear groweth upon the lower parts of elder, and sometimes ashes. In warm water it swelleth, and openeth extremely. Bacon's Natural History.

JEWS MALLOW. n. f. [corchorus, Latin.]

The leaves are produced alternately at the joints of the stalks: the flower has five leaves, which expand in form of a rose: the pointal of the flower becomes a cylindrical fruit, divided into five cells, filled with angular seeds. Rauwolf says it is sown in great plenty about Aleppo as a pot-herb, the Jews boiling the leaves of this plant to eat it with their meat. Ha[illegible]

JEWS-STONE. n. f. An extraneous fossil, being the clavated spine of a very large egg shaped sea-urchin, petrified by long lying in the earth. It is of a regular figure, oblong and rounded, swelling in the middle, and gradually tapering to each end, generally about three quarters of an inch in length, and half an inch in diameter. It is ridged and furrowed alternately, in a longitudinal direction, and its colour is a pale dusky grey, with a faint cast of dusky reddishness. It is found in Syria, lodged in a loose sandy stone, or a marly very hard earth. It is diuretick; but has been lately recommended as a lithontriptick. Hill's Mat. Med.

JEWS-HARP. n. f. A kind of musical instrument held between the teeth, which gives a sound by the motion of a broad spring

I G N

I'MAGE. n. f. [image, French; imago, Latin.]

1. Any corporeal representation, generally used of statues; a statue, a picture.

Whose is this image and superscription? Mat xxii. 20.
The one is too like an image, and says nothing, and the other too like my lady's eldest son, ever more talking. Shakesp.
Thy brother I,
Even like a stony image, cold and numb. Shakesp. Tit And.
The image of a deity may be a proper object for that which is but the image of a religion. South's Sermons.
Still must I be upbraided with your line;
But your late brother did not prize me less,
Because I could not boast of images. Dryd. Tyrann. Love.

2. An idol; a false god.

3. A copy; representation; likeness.

Long may'st thou live,
To bear his image and renew his glories! Shakesp. Hen. VI.

I have bewept a worthy husband's death,
And liv'd by looking on his images
But now two mirrours of his princely semblance
Are crack'd in pieces by malignant death. Shakesp. R. III.
The image of the jest
I'll shew you here at large. Shakesp. Merr Wives of Windf.
He made us to his image all agree;
That image is the soul, and that must be,
Or not the maker's image, or be free. Dryden.

4. Semblance; show; appearance.
Deny to speak with me? They're sick, they're weary,
They have travell'd all night! Mere fetches,
The images of revolt Shakespeare's King Lear.
This is the man should do the bloody deed:
The image of a wicked heinous fault
Lives in his eye. Shakespeare's King John.
[illegible]
And present death in various forms appears. Dryden's Æn.

5. An idea, a representation of any thing to the mind; a picture drawn in the fancy.
Outcasts of mortal race! can we conceive
Image of aught delightful, soft, or great? Prior.
When we speak of a figure of a thousand angles, we may have a clear idea of the number one thousand angles, but the image, or sensible idea, we cannot distinguish by fancy from the image of a figure that has nine hundred angles. Watts

To I'MAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To copy by the fancy; to imagine.
How are immaterial substances to be imaged, which are such things whereof we can have no notion? Dryden.
Image to thy mind
How our forefathers to the Stygian shades
Went quick. Phillips.
His ear oft frighted with the imag'd voice
Of heav'n, when first it thunder'd Prior.
If fate some future bard shall join
In sad similitude of griefs to mine,
Condemn'd whole years in absence to deplore,
And image charms he must behold no more. Pope.

I'MAGERY. n. s. [from image.]
1. Sensible representations; pictures; statues.
Of marble stone was cut
An altar, carv'd with cunning imagery. Fairy Queen.
When in those oratories might you see
Rich carvings, portraitures, and imagery;
Where ev'ry figure to the life express'd
The godhead's pow'r. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
Your gift shall two large goblets be
Of silver, wrought with curious imagery,
And high emboss'd. Dryden's Æn.

2. Show, appearance.
What can thy imagery of sorrow mean?
Secluded from the world, and all its care,
Hast thou to grieve or joy, to hope or fear? Prior.
All the visionary beauties of the prospect, the paint and imagery that attracted our senses, fade and disappear. Rogers.
Things of the world fill the imaginative part with beauties and fantastick imagery. Taylor.

3. Copies of the fancy; false ideas; imaginary phantasms.
It might be a mere dream which he saw, the imagery of a melancholick fancy, such as musing men mistake for a reality. Atterbury's Sermons.

4. Representations in writing; such descriptions as force the image of the thing described upon the mind.
I wish there may be in this poem any instance of good imagery. Dryden.

IMA'GINABLE. adj. [imaginable, Fr. from imagine.] Possible to be conceived.
It is not imaginable that men will be brought to obey what they cannot esteem. South's Sermons.
Men, sunk into the greatest darkness imaginable, retain some sense and awe of a Deity. Tillotson's Sermons.

IMA'GINANT. adj. [imaginant, French.] Imagining, forming ideas.
We will enquire what the force of imagination is, either upon the body imaginant, or upon another body. Bacon.

IMA'GINARY. adj. [imaginaire, French, from imagine.]
1. Fancied, visionary; existing only in the imagination.
[illegible] sorrow's eye,
Which, for things true, weeps things imaginary. Shakesp.
[illegible] creation.
Th' imaginary relish is so sweet,
That it enchants my sense. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.
Fortune is nothing else but a power imaginary, to which the successes of human actions and endeavours were for their variety ascribed. Raleigh's History of the World.
Why wilt thou add, to all the griefs I suffer,
Imaginary ills and fancied tortures? Addison's Cato.

IMA'GINATION. n. s. [imaginatio, Latin; imagination, French, from imagine.]
1. Fancy; the power of forming ideal pictures; the power of representing things absent to one's self or others.

Imagination I understand to be the representation of an [illegible] thing. Imagination is of three kinds: joined with belief of that which is to come; joined with memory of that which is past, and of things present, or as if they were present: for I comprehend in this imagination feigned and at pleasure, as if one should imagine such a man to be in the vestments of a pope, or to have wings. Bacon.
Our simple apprehension of corporal objects, if present, is sense, if absent, imagination. when we would perceive a material object, our fancies present us with its idea. Grew. Nat.
O whither shall I run, or which way fly
The sight of this so horrid spectacle,
Which erst my eyes beheld, and yet behold?
For dire imagination still pursues me. Milton's Agonistes.
His imaginations were often as just as they were bold and strong.
Where beams of warm imagination play,
The memory's soft figures melt away. Pope.

2. Conception; image in the mind; idea.
Sometimes despair darkens all her imaginations; sometimes the active passion of love cheers and clears her invention. Sidn.
Princes have but their titles for their glories,
An outward honour for an inward toil;
And, for unfelt imaginations,
They often feel a world of restless cares. Shakesp. R. III.
Better I were distract,
So should my thoughts be sever'd from my griefs;
And woes, by wrong imaginations, lose
The knowledge of themselves. Shakesp. King Lear.
We are apt to think that space, in itself, is actually boundless; to which imagination, the idea of space, of itself leads us. Locke.

3. Contrivance; scheme.
Thou hast seen all their vengeance, and all their imaginations against me. Lam. iii. 60.

IMA'GINATIVE. adj. [imaginatif, Fr. from imagine.] Fantastick; full of imagination.
Witches are imaginative, and believe oft times they do that which they do not. Bacon's Natural History.
Lay fetters and restraints upon the imaginative and fantastick part, because our fancy is usually pleased with the entertainment of shadows and gauds. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

To IMA'GINE. v. a. [imaginer, French; imaginor, Latin.]
1. To fancy; to paint in the mind.
Look what notes and garments he doth give thee,
Bring them, I pray thee, with imagin'd speed. Shakespeare.
Present fears
Are less than horrible imaginings. Shakesp. Macbeth.
What are our ideas of eternity and immensity but the repeated additions of certain ideas of imagined parts of duration and expansion, with the infinity of number, in which we can come to no end of addition? Locke.

2. To scheme; to contrive.
They intended evil against thee, they imagined a mischievous device. Ps. xxi. 11.

IMA'GINER. n. s. [from imagine.] One who forms ideas.
The juggler took upon him to know that such an one should point in such a place of a garter that was held up; and if he did it, by first telling the imagiuer, and after bidding the actor think Bacon's Natural History.

IMBE'CILE. adj. [imbecilis, Latin; imbecille, French.] Weak, feeble; wanting strength of either mind or body.

To IMBE'CILE. v. a. [from the adjective. This word is corruptly written embezzle.] To weaken a stock or fortune by clandestine expences or unjust appropriations.
Princes must in a special manner be guardians of pupils and widows, not suffering their persons to be oppressed, or their states imbeciled. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

IMBECI'LITY. n. s. [imbecillité, French.] Weakness, feebleness of mind or body.
A weak and imperfect rule argueth imbecility and imperfection. Hooker, b. v.
No imbecility of means can prejudice the truth of the promise of God herein. Hooker.
We that are strong must bear the imbecility of the impotent, and not please ourselves. Hooker.
That way we are contented to prove, which, being the worse in itself, is notwithstanding now, by reason of common imbecility, the fitter and likelier to be brooked. Hooker.
Strength would be lord of imbecility,
And the rude son would strike his father dead. Shakespeare.
Imbecility, for sex and age, was such as they could not lift up a hand against them. King Charles.
When man was fallen, and had abandoned his primitive innocence, a strange imbecility immediately seized and laid hold of him. Woodward's Natural History.

To IMBI'BE. v. a. [imbibo, Latin, imbiber, French.]
1. To drink in; to draw in.
A pot of ashes will receive more hot water than cold, forasmuch as the warm water imbibeth more of the salt. Brown.
The torrent merciless imbibes
Commissions, perquisites, and bribes. Swift.

I M B

Illumin'd wide,
The various-dyed clouds imbibe the sun. Thomson's Autumn.

2. To imbue into the mind
Those, that have imbibed this error, have extended the influence of this belief to the whole gospel, which they will not allow to contain any thing but promises. Hammond.
It is not easy for the mind to put off those confused notions and prejudices it has imbibed from custom. Locke.
Conversation with foreigners enlarges our minds, and sets them free from many prejudices we are ready to imbibe concerning them. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

3. To drench; to soak. This sense, though unusual, perhaps unexampled, is necessary in the English, unless the word imbue be adopted, which our writers seem not willing to receive.
Metals, corroded with a little acid, turn into rust, which is an earth tasteless and indissolvable in water; and this earth, imbibed with more acid, becomes a metallick salt. Newton

IMBI'BER. n. s. [from imbibe] That which drinks or sucks.
Salts are strong imbibers of sulphureous steams. Arbuthnot

IMBIBI'TION. n. s. [imbibition, French, from imbibe.] The act of sucking or drinking in.
Most powders grow more coherent by mixture of water than of oil: the reason is the congruity of bodies, which maketh a perfecter imbibition and incorporation. Bacon.
Heat and cold have a virtual transition, without communication of substance, but in moisture not; and to all madefaction there is required an imbibition. Bacon's Natural History.
A drop of oil, let fall upon a sheet of white paper, that part of it, which, by the imbibition of the liquor, acquires a greater continuity and some transparency, will appear much darker than the rest, many of the incident beams of light being now transmitted, that otherwise would be reflected. Boyle.

To IMBI'TTER. v. a. [from bitter.]
1. To make bitter
2. To deprive of pleasure; to make unhappy.
Let them extinguish their passions which imbitter their lives, and deprive them of their share in the happiness of the community. Addison's Freeholder
Is there any thing that more imbitters the enjoyments of this life than shame? South's Sermons.
3. To exasperate.

To IMBO'DY. v. a. [from body.]
1. To condense to a body.
2. To invest with matter.
An opening cloud reveals
An heav'nly form imbody'd, and array'd
With robes of light. Dryden.
Though assiduity in the most fixed cogitation be no trouble to immaterialised spirits, yet is it more than our embodied souls can bear without lassitude. Glanv. Scepf.
3. To bring together into one mass or company.
I by vow am so embodied yours,
That she which marries you must marry me. Shakespeare.
Never since created, man
Met such imbodied force, as nam'd with these,
Could merit more than that small infantry
War'd on by cranes. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.
Under their head imbody'd all in one. Milt. Par. Lost.
Then Claudius came, who led a num'rous band
Of troops imbodied, from the Sabine land. Dryden's Æn.
4. To inclose. Improper
In those strata we shall meet with the same metal or mineral imbodied in stone, or lodged in coal, that elsewhere we found in marle. Woodward's Natural History.

To IMBO'DY. v. n. To unite into one mass, to coalesce.
The soul grows clotted by contagion,
Imbodies and incbrutes, 'till she quite lose
The divine property of her first being Milton.
The idea of white, which snow yielded yesterday, and another idea of white from another snow to-day, put together in your mind, imbody and run into one. Locke

To IMBO'IL. v. n [from boil.] To exestuate; to effervesce; to move with violent agitation like hot liquor in a caldron
With whose reproach and odious menace,
The knight imboiling in his haughty heart,
Knit all his forces, and 'gan soon unbrace
His grasping hold Fairy Queen.

To IMBO'LDEN. v. a. [from bold.] To raise to confidence, to encourage.
'Tis necessary he should die
Nothing imboldens sin so much as mercy. Shak. Timon.
I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are, the which hath something emboldened me to this unseasoned intrusion. Shakes. Merry Wives of Windsor
I was the more imboldened, because I found I had a soul congenial to his. Dryden.
Nor flight was left, nor hopes to force his way;
Imbolden'd by despair, he stood at bay Dryden's Æn.
Their virtues and superior genius imboldened them, in great exigencies of state, to attempt the service of their prince and country out of the common forms. Sw.

To IMBOSOM. v. a. [from bosom.]
1. To hold on the bosom; to cover fondly with the folds of one's garment; to hide under any cover
The Father infinite,
By whom in bliss imbosom'd sat the son Milton's Par. Lost
Villages imbosom'd soft in trees,
And spiry towns by surging columns mark'd. Thomson.
2. To admit to the heart, or to affection
But glad desire, his late imbosom'd guest,
Yet but a babe, with mark of sight he mark'd. Sidney.
Who glad t' imbosom his affection vile,
Did all she might, more plainly to appear. Fairy Queen.

To IMBO'UND. v. a. [from bound.] To inclose; to shut in
That sweet breath,
Which was embounded in this beauteous clay. Shak. K. John.

To IMBO'W. v. a. [from bow.] To arch, to vault.
Prince Arthur gave a box of diamond sure,
Imbowed with gold and gorgeous ornament. Fairy Queen.
Imbowed windows be pretty retiring places for conference: they keep both the wind and sun off. Bacon.
Let my due feet never fail
To walk the studious cloister's pale,
And love the high embowed roof,
With antick pillar massy proof. Milton.

IMBO'WMENT. n. s. [from imbow.] Arch; vault.
The roof all open, not so much as any embowment near any of the walls left. Bacon's Natural History.

To IMBO'WER. v. a. [from bower.] To cover with a bower; to shelter with trees.
And stooping thence to Ham's embowering walks,
In spotless peace retir'd. Thomson.

To IMBRA'NGLE. v. a. To entangle. A low word.
With subtle cobweb cheats
They're catch'd in knotted law, like nets;
In which, when once they are imbrangled,
The more they stir, the more they're tangled. Hudibras

IMBRI'CATED. adj. [from imbrex, Latin.] Indented with concavities, bent and hollowed like a roof or gutter-tile.

IMBRICA'TION. n. s. [imbrex, Latin.] Concave indenture.
All is guarded with a well made tegument, adorned with neat imbrications, and many other fineries. Derham.

To IMBRO'WN. v. a. [from brown.] To make brown; to darken; to obscure; to cloud.
Where the morning sun first warmly smote
The open field, and where the unpierc'd shade
Imbrown'd the noontide bow'rs Milton's Paradise Lost.
The walking crew,
At thy request, support the miry shoe,
The foot grows black that was with dirt imbrown'd,
And in thy pocket gingling half-pence sound. Gay.
Another age shall see the golden ear
Imbrown the slope, and nod on the parterre. Pope.
Imbrown'd with native bronze, lo Henly stands. Pope.

To IMBRU'E. v. a [from in and brue.]
1. To steep; to soak, to wet much or long.
Thou mad'st many hearts to bleed
Of mighty victors, with wide wounds embru'd,
And by thy cruel darts to thee subdu'd. Spenser.
There streams a spring of blood so fast
From those deep wounds, as all embru'd the face
Of that accursed caitiff. Daniel's Civil War.
The merciless Turks, embrued with the Christian blood, were weary of slaughter, and began greedily to seek after the spoil. Knolles's History of the Turks.
At me, as at a mark, his bow he drew,
Whose arrows in my blood their wings imbrue. Sandys.
Lucius pities the offenders,
That would embrue their hands in Cato's blood. Addison.
Lo! these hands in murder are imbrued,
Those trembling feet by justice are pursu'd. Prior
These, where two ways in equal parts divide,
The direful monster from afar descry'd,
Two bleeding babes depending at her side;
Whose panting vitals, warm with life, she draws,
And in their hearts embrues her cruel claws. Pope.
His virgin sword Ægyptus' veins imbru'd,
The murd'rer fell, and blood atton'd for blood. Pope
A good man chuses rather to pass by a verbal injury than imbrue his hands in blood. Clar ffe.
2. To pour; to emit much store. Obsolete.
Some bathed k ffes, and did oft embrue
The sugar'd liquor through his melting lips. Fairy Queen.

To IMBRU'TE. v. a. [from brute.] To degrade to brutality.
I, who erst contended
With gods to sit the highest, am now constrain'd
Into a beast, and mix with bestial slime,
This essence to incarnate and imbrute. Milton's Par. Lost

To IMBRU'TE. v. n. To sink down to brutality.
The soul grows clotted by contagion,
Imbodies and imbrutes, 'till she quite lose
The divine property of her first being Milton

I M M

To IMBU'E. v. a. [imbuo, Latin. This word, which seems wanted in our language, has been proposed by several writers, but not yet adopted by the rest. Imbu, French, the participial adj. is only used.] To tincture deep; to imbibe with any liquor or die.

I would render this treatise intelligible to every rational man, however little versed in scholastick learning; among whom I expect it will have a fairer passage, than among those that are deeply imbued with other principles. Digby.

Cloaths which have once been throughly embued with black, cannot well afterwards be dyed into a lighter colour. Boyle.

Where the mineral matter is great, so as to take the eye, the body appears imbued and tinctured with the colour. Woodw.

To IMBU'RSE. v. a. [bourse, French.] To stock with money. This should be emburse, from emboursér, French.

IMITABI'LITY. n. f. [imitabilis, Latin.] The quality of being imitable.

According to the more curiousness of this imitability, so are the possibilities of being. Norris.

IMITABLE. adj. [imitabilis, Latin; imitable, French.]

1. Worthy to be imitated.

How could the most base men, and separate from all imitable qualities, attain to honour but by an observant slavish course? Raleigh's History of the World

As acts of parliament are not regarded by most imitable writers, I account the relation of them improper for history. Hayw.

2. Possible to be imitated.

The characters of men placed in lower stations of life, are more useful, as being imitable by greater numbers. Atterbury.

To I'MITATE. v. a. [imitor, Latin; imiter, French.]

1. To copy; to endeavour to resemble.

We imitate and practise to make swifter motions than any out of your muskets. Bacon.

Despise wealth, and imitate a god. Cowley.

I would careless some stableman of note,
And imitate his language and his coat. Man of Taste.

2. To counterfeit.

This hand appear'd a shining sword to wield,
And that sustain'd an imitated shield. Dryden's Æn.

3. To pursue the course of a composition, so as to use parallel images and examples.

For shame! what, imitate an ode! Gay.

IMITA'TION. n. f. [imitatio, Latin; imitation, French.]

1. The act of copying; attempt to resemble.

Since a true knowledge of nature gives us pleasure, a lively imitation of it, either in poetry or painting, must produce a much greater; for both these arts are not only true imitations of nature, but of the best nature. Dryden.

2. That which is offered as a copy.

3. A method of translating looser than paraphrase, in which modern examples and illustrations are used for ancient, or domestick for foreign.

In the way of imitation, the translator not only varies from the words and sense, but forsakes them as he sees occasion; and, taking only some general hints from the original, runs division on the groundwork. Dryden.

I'MITATIVE. adj. [imitativus, Latin.] Inclined to copy.

This temple, less in form, with equal grace,
Was imitative of the first in Thrace. Dryden.

IMITA'TOR. n. f. [Latin, imitateur, French.] One that copies another; one that endeavours to resemble another.

Imitators are but a servile kind of cattle, says the poet Dry.

IMMA'CULATE. adj. [immaculatus, Latin; immacule, Fr.]

1. Spotless; pure, unsoiled.

To keep this commandment immaculate and blameless, was to teach the gospel of Christ. Hooker

His words are bonds, his oaths are oracles;
His love sincere, his thoughts immaculate. Shakespeare.

The king, whom catholicks count a saint-like and immaculate prince, was taken away in the flower of his age. Bacon.

Were but my soul as pure
From other guilts as that, heav'n did not hold
One more immaculate. Denham's Sophy.

2. Pure; limpid. Improper.

Thou clear, immaculate, and silver fountain,
From whence this stream, through muddy passages,
Hath had his current and defil'd himself. Shakes. Rich. II.

To IMMA'NACLE. v. a. [from manacle.] To fetter; to confine.

Thou can'st not touch the freedom of my mind
With all thy charms, although this corporal rind
Thou hast immanacl'd. Milton

IMMA'NE. adj. [immanis, Latin.] Vast; prodigiously great.

IMMANENT. adj. [immanent, French; in and manens, Latin.] Intrinsick; inherent, internal.

Judging the infinite essence by our narrow selves, we ascribe inflections, motions, and such like immanent actions, to that nature which hath nothing in common with us. Glanv. Scepf.

What he wills and intends once, he willed and intended from all eternity, it being grossly contrary to the very first notions we have of the infinite perfections of the Divine Nature to state or suppose any new immanent act in God. South

IMMA'NIFEST adj. [in and manifest.] Not manifest, not plain.

A time not much unlike that which was before time, immanifest and unknown. Brown's Vulgar Errour

IMMA'NITY. n. f. [immanitas, Latin.] Barbarity, savageness.

It was both impious and unnatural,
That such immanity and bloody strife
Should reign among professors of one faith. Shakes. H VI.

IMMARCE'SSIBLE. adj. [in and marcesco, Latin.] Unfading. Dict.

IMMA'RTIAL. adj. [in and martial.] Not warlike.

My pow'rs are unfit,
Myself immartial. Chapman's Odyssey.

To IMMA'SK. v. a. [in and mask.] To cover, to disguise.

I have cases of buckram for the nonce, to immask our noted outward garments. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

IMMATERIAL. adj. [immateriel, Fr. in and materia, Latin.]

1. Incorporeal, distinct from matter; void of matter.

Angels are spirits immaterial and intellectual, the glorious inhabitants of those sacred palaces, where there is nothing but light and immortality, no shadow of matter for tears, discontentments, griefs, and uncomfortable passions to work upon, but all joy, tranquility, and peace, even for ever and ever, do dwell. Hooker.

As then the soul a substance hath alone,
Besides the body, in which she is confin'd;
So hath she not a body of her own,
But is a spirit, and immaterial mind. Davies.

Those immaterial felicities we expect, suggest the necessity of preparing our appetites, without which heaven can be no heaven to us. Decay of Piety.

No man that owns the existence of an infinite spirit can doubt of the possibility of a finite spirit; that is, such a thing as is immaterial, and does not contain any principle of corruption. Tillotson's Sermons.

2. Unimportant; without weight; impertinent; without relation. This sense has crept into the conversation and writings of barbarians; but ought to be utterly rejected.

IMMATE'RIALITY. n. f. [from immaterial.] Incorporeity; distinctness from body or matter.

When we know cogitation is the prime attribute of a spirit, we infer its immateriality, and thence its immortality. Watts.

IMMATE'RIALLY. adv. [from immaterial.] In a manner not depending upon matter.

The visible species of things strike not our senses immaterially; but streaming in corporal rays, do carry with them the qualities of the object from whence they flow, and the medium through which they pass. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

IMMATE'RIALIZED. adj. [from in and materia, Latin.] Distinct from matter, incorporeal.

Though assiduity in the most fixed cogitation be no trouble to immaterialized spirits, yet is it more than our imbodied souls can bear without lassitude. Glanv. Scepf.

IMMATE'RIALNESS. n. f. [from immaterial.] Distinctness from matter.

IMMATE'RIATE. adj. [in and materia, Latin.] Not consisting of matter; incorporeal, without body.

It is a virtue which may be called incorporeal and immateriate, whereof there be in nature but few. Bacon.

After a long enquiry of things immerse in matter, I interpose some object which is immaterial, or less materiate; such as this of sounds. Bacon.

IMMATU'RE. adj. [immaturus, Latin.]

To INA'RCH v. a. [in and arch.]

Inarching is a method of grafting, which is commonly called grafting by approach. This method of grafting is used when the stock and the tree may be joined: take the branch you would inarch, and, having fitted it to that part of the stock where you intend to join it, pare away the rind and wood on one side about three inches in length: after the same manner cut the stock or branch in the place where the graft is to be united, so that they may join equally together that the sap may meet: then cut a little tongue upwards in the graft, and make a notch in the stock to admit it; so that when they are joined the tongue will prevent their slipping, and the graft will more closely unite with the stock. Having thus placed them exactly together, tie them; then cover the place with grafting clay, to prevent the air from entering to dry the wound, or the wet from getting in to rot the stock you should fix a stake into the ground, to which that part of the stock, as also the graft, should be fastened, to prevent the wind from breaking them asunder In this manner they are to remain about four months, in which time they will be sufficiently united, and the graft may then be cut from the mother tree, observing to slope it off close to the stock, and cover the joined parts with fresh grafting clay The operation is always performed in April or May, and is commonly practised upon oranges, myrtles, almonds, walnuts firrs, and pines, which will not succeed by common grafting or budding Miller

INCOEXI'STENCE. n. f. [in and coexistence] The quality of not existing together, non-association of existence.

Another more incurable part of ignorance, which sets us more remote from a certain knowledge of the coexistence or incoexistence of different ideas in the same subject, is, that there is no discoverable connection between any secondary quality and those primary qualities it depends on. Locke.

INCO'G. adv. [corrupted by mutilation from incognito, Latin] Unknown; in private.

But if you're rough, and use him like a dog,
Depend upon it, he'll remain incog. Addison.

INCO'GITANCY. n. f. [incogitantia, Latin.] Want of thought.

One man's fancies are laws to others, who convey them as such to their successors, who afterwards misname all unobsequiousness to their incogitancy presumption. Boyle.

Next to the stupid and meerly vegetable state of incogitancy, we may rank partial and piece-meal consideration. Dec. of Piety.

INCO'GITATIVE. adj. [in and cogitative.] Wanting the power of thought.

Purely material beings, as clippings of our beards, and sensible, thinking, perceiving beings, such as we find ourselves, we will call cogitative and incogitative beings. Locke.

INCO'GNITO. adv. [incognitus, Latin.] In a state of concealment.

'Twas long ago
Since gods came down incognito. Prior.

INCOHE'RENCE. } n. f. [in and coherence]
INCOHE'RENCY }

1. Want of connection; incongruity; inconsequence; want of dependance of one part upon another.

I find that laying the intermediate ideas naked in their due order, shews the incoherence of the argumentations better than syllogisms. Locke.

Incoherences in matter, and suppositions without proofs, put handsomely together, are apt to pass for strong reason. Locke.

2. Want of cohesion; looseness of material parts.

If plaister be beaten into an impalpable powder, when poured out it will emulate a liquor, by reason that the smalness and incoherence of the parts do both make them easy to be put into motion, and makes the pores they intercept so small, that they interrupt not the unity or continuity of the mass. Boyle.

INCOHE'RENT. adj. [in and coherent]

1. Inconsequential; inconsistent; having no dependence of one part upon another.

We have instances of perception whilst we are asleep, and retain the memory of them; but how extravagant and incoherent are they, and how little conformable to the perfection of a rational being! Locke.

2. Without cohesion; loose; not fixed to each other.

Had the strata of stone become solid, but the matter whereof they consist continued lax and incoherent, they had consequently been as pervious as those of marle or gravel. Woodw.

INCOHE'RENTLY. adv. [from incoherent.] Inconsistently, inconsequentially.

The character of Eurylochus is the imitation of a person confounded with fears, speaking irrationally and incoherently. Pearce's Note, on the Odyssey

[illegible] [in and come.] Revenues; produce of any [illegible]

Thou who repinest at the plenty of thy neighbour, and the greatness of his incomes, consider what are frequently the dismal consequences of all this. South's Sermons.

No fields afford
So large an income to the village lord. Dryden's Georg.

St. Gaul has scarce any lands belonging to it, and little or no income but what arises from its trade: the great support of this little state is its linen manufacture. Addison on Italy.

Notwithstanding the large incomes annexed to some few of her preferments, this church hath in the whole little to subsist on. Atterbury's Sermons

INCOMMENSURABI'LITY. n. f. [from incommensurable] The state of one thing with respect to another, when they cannot be compared by any common measure.

INCOMME'NSURABLE. adj. [French, from in, con, and [illegible] rabilis, Latin] Not to be reduced to any measure common to both; not to be measured together, such as that the proportion of one to the other can be told.

Our disputations about vacuum or space, incommensurable quantities, the infinite divisibility of matter, and eternal duration, will lead us to see the weakness of our nature. Watts.

INCOMME'NSURATE adj. [in, con, and mensura, Latin.] Not admitting one common measure.

The diagonal line and side of a quadrate, which, to our apprehension, are incommensurate, are yet commensurable to the infinite comprehension of the divine intellect. Hore.

As all other measures of time are reducible to these three; so we labour to reduce these three, though strictly of themselves incommensurate to one another, for civil use, measuring the greater by the less. Holder on Time.

If the year comprehend days, it is but as any greater space of time may be said to comprehend a less, though the less space be incommensurate to the greater Holder on Time.

To INCOMMODATE. } v. a. [incommodo, Lat. incommoder,
To INCOMMO'DE. } Fr.] To be inconvenient to, to hinder or embarrass without very great injury.

A gnat, planted upon the horn of a bull, begged the bull's pardon, but rather than incommode ye, says he, I'll remove. L'Estrange.

Although they sometimes molest and incommode the inhabitants of some parts, yet the agent, whereby both the one and the other is effected, is of that indispensable necessity to the earth and to mankind, that they could not subsist without it. Woodward's Natural Hist.

INCOMMO'DIOUS. adj. [incommodus, Latin.] Inconvenient; vexatious without great mischief.

Things of general benefit, for in this world what is so perfect that no inconvenience doth ever follow it? may by some accident be incommodious to a few. Hooker.

Mens intentions in speaking are to be understood, without frequent explanations and incommodious interruptions. Locke.

INCOMMO'DIOUSLY. adv. [from incommodious.] Inconveniently; not at ease.

INCOMMO'DIOUSNESS. n. f. [from incommodious.] Inconvenience.

Diseases, disorders, and the incommodiousness of external nature, are inconsistent with happiness. Burnet.

INCOMMO'DITY. n. f. [incommodité, Fr. incommoditas, Latin] Inconvenience; trouble.

Declare your opinion, what incommodity you have conceived to be in the common law, which I would have thought most free from all such disuse. Spenser's State of Ireland

If iron can be incorporated with flint or stone, without over great charge, or other incommodity, the cheapness doth make the compound stuff profitable. Bacon.

By considering the region and the winds, one might so cast the rooms, which shall most need fire, that he should little fear the incommodity of smoak. Wotton's Architecture.

INCOMMUNICABI'LITY. n. f. [from incommunicable] The quality of not being impartible.

INCOMMU'NICABLE. adj. [incommunicable, Fr. in and communicable.]

INCOMPATIBI'LITY. n. f. [properly incompetibility, in and competo, Latin.] Inconsistency of one thing with another.

He overcame that natural incompatibility, which hath been noted between the vulgar and the sovereign favour. Wotton.

The reason of the stress rests not upon the incompetibility of excess of one infinitude above another, either in intension or extension; but the incompetibility of any multitude to be infinite. Hale.

INCOMPA'TIBLE. [incompatible, French; rather incompetible, as it is sometimes written; in and competo, Lat.] Inconsistent with something else; such as cannot subsist or cannot be possessed together with something else.

Fortune and love have ever been so incompatible, that it is no wonder, madam, if, having had so much of the one for you, I have ever found so little of the other for myself. Suckl.

May not the outward expressions of love in many good Christians be greater to some other object than to God? Or is this incompetible with the sincerity of the love of God? Hamm.

The repugnancy of infinitude is equally incompetible to continued or successive motion, and depends upon the incompossibility of things successive with infinitude. Hale.

We know those colours which have a friendship with each other, and those which are incompatible, by mixing together those colours of which we would make trial. Dryden.

Sense I have proved to be incompatible with mere bodies, even those of the most compound and elaborate textures. Bent.

INCO'MPATIBLY. adv. [for incompetibly, from incompatible.] Inconsistently.

INCO'MPETENCY. n. f. [incompetence, Fr. from incompetent] Inability; want of adequate ability or qualification.

Our not being able to discern the motion of a shadow of a dial-plate, or that of the index upon a clock, ought to make us sensible of the incompetency of our eyes to discern some motions of natural bodies incomparably slower than these. Boyle.

INCO'MPETENT. adj. [in and competent.] Not suitable; not adequate; not proportionate. In the civil law it denotes some defect of right to do any thing.

Richard III. had a resolution, out of hatred to his brethren, to disable their issues, upon false and incompetent pretexts, the one of attainder, the other of illegitimation. Bacon's H. VII.

Every speck does not blind a man, nor does every infirmity make one unable to discern, or incompetent to reprove the grosser faults of others. Government of the Tongue.

I thank you for the commission you have given me: how I have acquitted myself of it, must be left to the opinion of the world, in spight of any protestation which I can enter against the present age, as incompetent or corrupt judges. Dryden.

Laymen, with equal advantages of parts, are not the most incompetent judges of sacred things. Dryden.

An equal attraction on all sides of all matter, is just equal to no attraction at all; and by this means all the motion in the universe must proceed from external impulse alone, which is an incompetent cause for the formation of a world. Bentley.

INCO'MPETENTLY. adv. [from incompetent] Unsuitably; unduly.

INCOMPLE'TE. adj. [in and complete.] Not perfect; not finished.

It pleaseth him in mercy to account himself incomplete and maimed without us. Hooker.

In incomplete ideas we are apt to impose on ourselves, and wrangle with others, especially where they have particular and familiar names. Locke.

INCOMPLE'TENESS. n. f. [from incomplete] Imperfection; unfinished state.

The incompleteness of our seraphick lover's happiness, in his fruitions, proceeds not from their want of satisfactoriness, but of an intire possession. Boyle.

INCOMPLI'ANCE. n. f. [in and compliance]

1. Untractableness; impracticableness; contradictious temper.

Self-conceit produces peevishness and incompliance of humour in things lawful and indifferent. Tillotson's Sermons.

2. Refusal of compliance.

Consider the vast disproportion between the worst inconveniences that can attend our incompliance with men, and the eternal displeasure of an offended God. Rogers.

He descends to the solemnity of a pact and covenant, and has indented with us. Decay of Piety.

INDE'NT. n. f. [from the verb.] Inequality; incisure, indentation

Trent shall not wind with such a deep indent,
To rob me of so rich a bottom here. Shakesp. Hen IV.

INDENTA'TION n. f [in and dens, Latin.] An indenture; waving in any figure

The margins on each side do not terminate in a streight line, but are indented, each indentation being continued in a small ridge across the line, to the indentation that answers it on the opposite margin. Woodward on Fossils.

INDE'NTURE. n. f [from indent.] A covenant, so named because the counterparts are indented or cut one by the other

In Hall's chronicle much good matter is quite marred with indenture English. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

The critick to his grief will find
How firmly these indentures bind. Swift

INDEPE[illegible] [illegible] French and
INDEPE[illegible] [illegible] trol; state over which none has power.

Dreams may give us some idea of the great excellency of a human soul, and some intimations of its independency on matter. Addison's Spectator.

Let fortune do her worst, whatever she makes us lose, as long as she never makes us lose our honesty and our independence. Pope.

Give me, I cry'd, enough for me,
My bread and independency
So bought an annual rent or two,
And liv'd just as you see I do. Pope.

INDEPE'NDENT. adj. [independant, Fr. in and dependent.]

1. Not depending; not supported by any other; not relying on another; not controlled. It is used with on, of, or from before the object; of which on seems most proper, since we say to depend on, and consequently dependent on.

Creation must needs infer providence, and God's making the world irrefragably proves that he governs it too; or that a being of dependent nature remains nevertheless independent upon him in that respect. South's Sermons.

Since all princes of independent governments are in a state of nature, the world never was without men in that state. Locke.

The town of St. Gaul is a protestant republick, independent of the abbot, and under the protection of the cantons. Addis.

2. Not relating to any thing else, as to a superiour cause or power.

The consideration of our understanding, which is an incorporeal substance independent from matter; and the contemplation of our own bodies, which have all the stamps and characters of excellent contrivance; these alone do very easily guide us to the wise Author of all things. Bentley's Sermons.

INDEPE'NDENT. n. s. One who in religious affairs holds that every congregation is a compleat church, subject to no superiour authority.

We shall, in our sermons, take occasion to justify such passages in our liturgy as have been unjustly quarrelled at by presbyterians, independents, or other puritan sectaries. Sanderf.

A very famous independent minister was head of a college in those times. Addison's Spectator.

INDEPE'NDENTLY. adv. [from independent.] Without reference to other things.

Dispose lights and shadows, without finishing every thing, independently the one of the other. Dryden.

INDESE'RT. n. s. [in and desert.] Want of merit.

Those who were once looked on as his equals, are apt to think the fame of his merit a reflection on their own indesert. Addison's Spectator.

Glass is so compact and firm a body, that it is indestructible by art or nature. Boyle.

INDETE'RMINABLE. adj. [in and determinable.] Not to be fixed; not to be defined or settled.

There is not only obscurity in the end, but beginning of the world; that as its period is inscrutable, so is its nativity indeterminable. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

INDETE'RMINATE. adj. [indeterminé, Fr. in and determinate.] Unfixed; not defined; indefinite.

The rays of the same colour were by turns transmitted at one thickness, and reflected at another thickness, for an indeterminate number of successions. Newton's Opt.

INDETE'RMINATELY. adv. [in and determinately.] Indefinitely; not in any settled manner.

His perspicacity discerned the loadstone to respect the North, when ours beheld it indeterminately. Brown's Vulg. Err.

The depth of the hold is indeterminately expressed in the description. Arbuthnot on Coins.

INDETE'RMINED. adj. [in and determined.] Unsettled; unfixed.

We should not amuse ourselves with floating words of indetermined signification, which we can use in several senses to serve a turn. Locke.

INDETERMINA'TION. n. s. [in and determination.] Want of determination; want of fixed or stated direction.

By contingents I understand all things which may be done, and may not be done, may happen, or may not happen, by reason of the indetermination or accidental concurrence of the causes. Bramhall against Hobbes.

INDEVO'TION. n. s. [indevotion, Fr. in and devotion.] Want of devotion; irreligion.

Let us make the church the scene of our penitence, as of our faults; deprecate our former indevotion, and, by an exemplary reverence, redress the scandal of our profaneness. Decay of Piety.

INDEVOU'T. adj. [indevot, Fr. in and devout.] Not devout; not religious; irreligious.

He prays much, yet curses more; whilst he is meek, but Indevout. Decay of Piety.

2. The hand that points to any thing, as to the hour or way.

They have no more inward self-consciousness of what they do or suffer, than the index of a watch, of the hour it points to. Bentley's Sermons.

3. The table of contents to a book.

In such indexes, although small,
To their subsequent volumes, there is seen
The baby figure of the giant mass
Of things to come, at large. Shakespeare.

If a book has no index, or good table of contents, 'tis very useful to make one as you are reading it; and in your index to take notice only of parts new to you. Watts.

INDEXTE'RITY. n. s. [in and dexterity.] Want of dexterity; want of readiness; want of handiness.

The indexterity of our consumption-curers demonstrates their dimness in beholding its causes. Harvey on Consumptions.

INDIAN Arrow-root. n. s. [marcanta, Latin.] A root.

It has a flower consisting of one leaf, almost funnel shaped, opening in six parts, three of which are alternately larger than the others; the lower part of the flower-cup afterwards becomes an oval shaped fruit, having one cell, with one hard rough seed. It was brought from the Spanish settlements of America into the islands of Barbadoes and Jamaica, where it is cultivated as a medicinal plant, it being a sovereign remedy for curing the bite of wasps, and expelling the poison of the manchineel tree. This root the Indians apply to extract the venom of their arrows: after they have dug it up they clean it, mash it, and lay it as a poultice to the wounded part, and are generally successful in the cure. Miller.

INDIAN Cress. n. s. [nasturtium, Latin.] A plant.

The leaves are round, umbilicated, and placed alternately; the stalks trailing; the cup of the flower is quinquefid, the flowers consist of five leaves in form of a violet; the seeds are roundish and rough, three of them succeeding each flower. The species are five. Miller.

INDIAN Fig. n. s. [opuntia, Latin.] A plant.

The characters are, the flower consists of many leaves, which expand in form of a rose, having a great number of stamina in the centre, which grow upon the top of the ovary: the ovary afterwards becomes a fleshy umbilicated fruit, with a soft pulp, inclosing many seeds, which are for the most part angular. Miller.

INDIAN Red. n. s. A kind of mineral earth.

Indian red, so called by the painters, is a species of ochre; and is a very fine purple earth, of firm compact texture, and great weight: while in the stratum it is of a pure blood colour, and almost of a stony hardness; when dry it is of a fine glowing red, of a rough dusty surface, and, when broken, full of white particles, large, solid, bright, and glittering. It is also called Persian earth, and is dug in the island of Ormuz in the Persian gulph, and also at Bombay. Hill on Fossils.

INDICANT. adj. [indicans, Latin.] Showing; pointing out; that which directs what is to be done in any disease.

To INDICATE. v. a. [indico, Latin.]

1. To show, to point out.
2. [In physick.] To point out a remedy.

INDICA'TION. n. s. [indication, Fr. indicatio, from indico, Lat.]

1. Mark, token; sign; note, symptom.

The frequent stops they make in the most convenient places, are a plain indication of their weariness. Addison's Guardian.

We think that our successes are a plain indication of the divine favour towards us. Atterbury's Sermons.

2. [In physick.] Indication is of four kinds: vital, preservative, curative, and palliative, as it directs what is to be done to continue life, cutting off the cause of an approaching distemper, curing it whilst it is actually present, or lessening its effects, or taking off some of its symptoms before it can be wholly removed. Quincy.

These be the things that govern nature principally, and without which you cannot make any true analysis, and indication of the proceedings of nature. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The depravation of the instruments of mastication is a natural indication of a liquid diet. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. Discovery made; intelligence given.

If a person, that had a fair estate in reversion, should be assured by some skilful physician, that he would inevitably fall into a disease that would totally deprive him of his understanding and memory; if, I say, upon a certain belief of this indication, the man should appear overjoyed at the news, would not all that saw him conclude that the distemper had seized him? Bentley's Sermons.

INDICATIVE. adj. [indicatif, Fr. indicativus, Lat.]

1. Showing, informing, pointing out.
2. [In grammar.] A certain modification of a verb, expressing affirmation or indication.

By an equal indifferency for all truth, I mean, not loving it as such, before we know it to be true. Locke.

A perfect indifferency in the mind, not determinable by its last judgment, would be as great an imperfection as the want of indifferency to act, or not to act, till determined by the will. Locke.

Those who would borrow light from expositors, either consult only those who have the good luck to be thought sound and orthodox, avoiding those of different sentiments, or else with indifferency look into the notes of all commentators. Locke.

2. Impartiality.

[illegible] can't but greatly commend it. Whitgifte.

3. Negligence; want of affection; unconcernedness.

Indifference cannot but be criminal, when it is conversant about objects which are so far from being of an indifferent nature, that they are of the highest importance. Addison.

A place which we must pass through, not only with the indifference of strangers, but with the vigilance of those who travel through the country of an enemy. Rogers.

Indifference, clad in wisdom's guise,
All fortitude of mind supplies;
For how can stony bowels melt,
In those who never pity felt? Swift.

He will let you know he has got a clap with as much indifferency as he would a piece of publick news. Swift.

The people of England should be frighted with the French king and the pretender once a year: the want of observing this necessary precept, has produced great indifference in the vulgar. Arbuthnot.

4. State in which no moral or physical reason preponderates, state in which there is no difference.

The choice is left to our discretion, except a principal bond [illegible] remove the indifference that such things have in themselves: their indifference is removed, if we take away our own liberty. Hooker.

TO INFATUATE. v. a. [infatuo, from in and fatuus, Latin; infatuer, French.] To strike with folly, to deprive of understanding.

The judgment of God will be very visible in infatuating a people, as ripe and prepared for destruction, into folly and madness, making the weak to contribute to the designs of the wicked; and suffering even those, out of a confidence of their guilt, to grow more wicked. Clarendon.

It is the reforming of the vices and sottishness that had long overspread the infatuated, gentile world, a prime branch of that design of Christ's sending his disciples. Hammond.

The

The people are so universally infatuated with the notion, that, if a cow falls sick, it is ten to one but an old woman is crept up in prison for it. Addison on Italy.

The carriage of our atheists or deists is amazing: no dotage so infatuate, no phrensy so extravagant as theirs. Bentley.

May hypocrites,
That fly speak one thing, another think,
Drink on unwarned, 'till, by enchanting cups
Infatuate, they their way thoughts dictate. Phillips.

INFATUA'TION. n. f. [from infatuate.] The act of striking with folly, deprivation of reason.

Where men give themselves over to the defence of wicked interests and false propositions, it is just with God to smite the greatest abilities with the greatest infatuations. South's Serm.

INFA'USTING. n. f [from infaustus, Lat.] The act of making unlucky. An odd and inelegant word.

As the king did in some part remove the envy from himself, so he did not observe that he did withal bring a kind of malediction and infausting upon the marriage, as an ill prognostick. Bacon's Henry VII.

INFEASIBLE. adj. [in and feasible.] Impracticable.

This is so difficult and infeasible, that it may well drive modesty to despair of science. Glanv. Scep.

To INFECT. v. a. [infecter, French; infectus, Latin.]

1. To act upon by contagion; to affect with communicated qualities; to hurt by contagion; to taint; to poison, to pollute.

They put such words in the mouths of one of these fantastical mind infected people, that children and mariners call lovers. Sidney.

The eyes, sweet lady, have infected mine. Shak. R. III.

The nature of bad news infects the teller. Shakespeare.

Every day
It would infect his speech, that if the king
Should without issue die, he'd carry it so
To make the sceptre his Bacon's Henry VII.

Infected minds
To their deaf pillows will discharge their secrets. Shakesp.

She speaks poniards, and every word stabs: if her breath were as terrible as her terminations, there were no living near her; she would infect to the north star. Shakespeare.

I am return'd your soldier;
No more infected with my country's love,
Than when I parted hence. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

The love-tale
Infected Sion's daughters with like heat,
Whose wanton passions in the sacred porch
Ezekiel saw Milton.

2. To fill with something hurtfully contagious.

Infected be the air whereon they ride,
And damn'd all those that trust them! Shakesp. Macbeth.

INFE'CTION. n. f [infection, Fr. infectio, Latin.] Contagion; mischief by communication; taint; poison.

Infection is that manner of communicating a disease by some effluvia, or particles which fly off from distempered bodies, and mixing with the juices of others, occasion the same disorders as in the bodies they came from Quincy.

What a strange infection
Is fall'n into thy ear! Shakesp. Cymbeline.

The bellied gods
Purge all infections from our air, whilst you
Do climate here. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

Vouchsafe, diffus'd infection of a man,
For these known evils but to give me leave,
By circumstance, to curse thy cursed self. Shakesp. R. III.

Hence,
Lest that th' infection of his fortune take
Like hold on thee Shakespeare's King Lear.

The transmission or emission of the thinner and more airy parts of bodies, as in odours and infections, is, of all the rest, the most corporeal; but withal there be a number of those emissions, both wholesome and unwholesome, that give no smell at all. Bacon's Natural History.

INFE'CTIOUS. adj. [from infect.] Contagious; influencing by communicated qualities.

The most infectious pestilence upon thee! Shakespeare.

In a house,
Where the infectious pestilence did reign. Shakespeare.

Some known diseases are infectious, and others are not: those that are infectious are such as are chiefly in the spirits, and not so much in the humours, and therefore pass easily from body to body, such as pestilences and sippitudes. Bacon.

Smells may have as much power to do good as to do harm, and contribute to health as well as to diseases, which is too much felt by experience in all that are infectious, and by the operation of some poisons, that are received only by the smell. Temple.

INFE'CTIOUSLY. adv. [from infectious] Contagiously

He will dotes, that is inclinable
To what infectiously itself affects. Shakes. Troil. and Cressida

INFE'CTIOUSNESS. n. f. [from infectious.] The quality of being infectious, contagiousness.

INFE'CTIVE. adj. [from infect.] Having the quality of contagion.

True love, well considered, hath an infective power Sidn.

INFECU'ND. n. f. [infecundus, Lat n.] Unfruitful, sterile.

How safe and agreeable a conservatory the earth is to vegetables, is manifest from their rotting, drying, or being rendered infecund in the waters, or the air; but in the earth their vigour is long preserved. Derham's Physico-Theology.

INFECU'NDITY. n. f [infecunditas, Lat.] Want of fertility, barrenness.

INFELI'CITY. n. f. [infelicité, Fr. infelicitas, Lat. n.] Unhappiness; misery; calamity.

Whatever is the ignorance and infelicity of the present state, we were made wise and happy. Glanv. Scep. c. 1.

Here is our great infelicity, that, when single words signify complex ideas, one word can never distinctly manifest all the parts of a complex idea Watts.

To INFE'R. v. a. [inferer, French; infero, Latin.]

1. To bring on; to induce

Vomits infer some small detriment to the lungs. Harvey.

2. To infer is nothing but, by virtue of one proposition laid down as true, to draw in another as true, i. e. to see or suppose such a connection of the two ideas of the inferred proposition Locke.

Yet what thou can'st attain, which best may serve
To glorify the Maker, and infer
Thee also happier, shall not be with-held
Thy hearing. Milton's Par. Lost, b. viii.

Great,
Or bright, infers not excellence: the earth,
Though in comparison of heav'n so small,
Nor glistering, may of solid good contain
More plenty than the sun, that barren shines. Milton.

One would wonder how, from so differing premisses, they should all infer the same conclusion. Decay of Piety.

They have more opportunities than other men have of purchasing publick esteem, by deserving well of mankind, and such opportunities always infer obligations. Atterbury.

3. To offer; to produce.

Full well hath Clifford play'd the orator,
Inferring arguments of mighty force. Shakes. Hen. VI.

INFERENCE n. f. [inference, French, from infer.] Conclusion drawn from previous arguments.

Though it may chance to be right in the conclusion, it is yet unjust and mistaken in the method of inference. Glanv.

These inferences or conclusions are the effects of reasoning, and the three propositions, taken all together, are called syllogism or argument. Watts.

INFE'RIBLE. adj. [from infer.] Deducible from premised grounds.

As simple mistakes commonly beget fallacies, so men from fallacious foundations, and misapprehended mediums, effect conclusions no way inferrible from their premisses. Brown.

INFE'RIORITY n. f [infériorité, Fr from inferiour] Lower state of dignity or value.

The language, though not of equal dignity, yet as near approaching to it as our modern barbarism will allow, and therefore we are to rest contented with that only inferiority which is not possibly to be remedied. Dryden.

INFE'RIOUR. adj. [inferior, Lat. inférieur, French.]

1. Lower in place.

2. Lower in station or rank of life.

A great person gets more by obliging his inferiour than by disdaining him South.

3. Lower in value or excellency

The love of liberty with life is giv'n,
And life itself th' inferiour gift of heav'n. Dryden.

I have added some original papers of my own, which, whether they are equal or inferiour to my other poems, an author is the most improper judge of. Dryden.

4. Subordinate.

General and fundamental truths in philosophy, religion, and human life, conduct our thoughts into a thousand inferiour and particular propositions. Watts.

INFE'RIOUR. n. f. [from the adjective.] One in a lower rank or station than another.

INFE'RNAL. adj. [infernal, French; infernus, Latin.] Hellish; tartarean

His gigantick limbs, with large embrace,
Infold nine acres of infernal space. Dryden's Æn.

INFE'RNAL Stone. n. f.

Infernal stone, or the lunar caustick, is prepared from an evaporated solution of silver, or from crystals of silver. It is a very powerful caustick, eating away the flesh and even the bones to which it is applied. Hill's Mat. Med.

INFE'RTILE. adj. [infertile, Fr in and fertile.] Unfruitful; not productive; without fecundity; infecund

Ignorance being of itself, like stiff clay, an infertile soil, when pride comes to scorch and harden it, it grows perfectly impenetrable. Government of the Tongue

INFERTI'LITY n. f [infertilité, Fr. from infertile] Unfruitfulness, want of fertility.

The ſame diſtemperature of the air that occaſioned the plague, occaſioned alſo the infertility or noxiouſneſs of the ſoil, whereby the fruits of the earth became either very ſmall, or very unwholſome. Hale's Origin of Mankind

To INFE'ST. v. a. [infeſter, Fr. infeſt, Latin.] To harraſs, to diſturb; to plague.

They ceaſed not, in the mean while, to ſtrengthen that part which in heart they favoured, and to infeſt by all means, under colour of other quarrels, their greateſt adverſaries in this cauſe. Hooker.

Although they were a people infeſted, and mightily hated of [illegible] of their ſtate, 'till the time beforementioned was expired. Hooker.

Into my feeble breaſt
Come gently; but not with that mighty rage
Wherewith the martial troops thou do'ſt infeſt,
And hearts of greateſt heroes do'ſt enrage. Spenſer

They were no mean, diſtreſſed, calamitous perſons that fled to him for refuge, but of ſo great quality, as it was apparent that they came not thither to protect their own fortune, but to infeſt and invade his. Bacon's Henry VII.

Theſe, ſaid the genius, are envy, avarice, ſuperſtition, love, with the like cares and paſſions that infeſt human life. Addiſon's Spectator

No diſeaſe infeſts mankind more terrible in its ſymptoms and effects. Arbuthnot on Diet.

INFE'STRED. adj. [in and feſter.] Rankling; inveterate.

This curſed creature, mindful of that old
Infeſtred grudge, the which his mother felt,
So ſoon as Clarion he did behold,
His heart with vengeful malice inly ſwelt. Spenſer.

INFEUDA'TION. n. ſ. [in and feudum, Lat.] The act of putting one in poſſeſſion of a fee or eſtate.

Another military proviſion was conventional and by tenure, upon the infeudation of the tenant, and was uſually called knight's ſervice. Hale's Common Law of England.

I'NFIDEL. n. ſ. [infidele, Fr. infidelis, Latin.] An unbeliever; a miſcreant; a pagan, one who rejects Chriſtianity.

Exhorting her, if ſhe did marry, yet not to join herſelf to an infidel, as in thoſe times ſome widows chriſtian had done, for the advancement of their eſtate in this world. Hooker.

INFIDE'LITY. n. ſ. [infidelité, French; infidelitas, Lat.]

1. Want of faith.

The conſideration of the divine omnipotence and infinite wiſdom, and our own ignorance, are great inſtruments of ſilencing the murmurs of infidelity. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

2. Diſbelief of Chriſtianity.

One would fancy that infidels would be exempt from that ſingle fault, which ſeems to grow out of the imprudent fervours of religion, but ſo it is, that infidelity is propagated with as much fierceneſs and contention, as if the ſafety of mankind depended upon it. Addiſon's Spectator

3. Treachery; deceit.

The infidelities on the one part between the two ſexes, and the caprices on the other, the vanities and vexations attending even the moſt refined delights that make up this buſineſs of life, render it ſilly and uncomfortable. Spectator.

I'NFINITE. adj. [infini, French; infinitus, Latin.]

1. Unbounded; boundleſs; unlimited, immenſe; having no boundaries or limits to its nature.

Impoſſible it is, that God ſhould withdraw his preſence from any thing, becauſe the very ſubſtance of God is infinite. Hooker.

What's time, when on eternity we think?
A thouſand ages in that ſea muſt ſink:
Time's nothing but a word; a million
Is full as far from infinite as one. Denham.

Thou ſov'reign pow'r, whoſe ſecret will controuls
The inward bent and motion of our ſouls!
Why haſt thou plac'd ſuch infinite degrees
Between the cauſe and cure of my diſeaſe? Prior.

When we would think of infinite ſpace or duration, we at firſt make ſome very large idea; as perhaps of millions of ages or miles, which poſſibly we multiply ſeveral times. Locke.

Even an angel's comprehenſive thought
Cannot extend as far as thou haſt wrought:
Our vaſt conceptions are by ſwelling brought,
Swallow'd and loſt in infinite, to nought. Dennis.

2. It is hyperbolically uſed for large, great.

I'NFINITELY. adv. [from infinite.] Without limits; without bounds, immenſely.

Infinitely the greater part of mankind have profeſſed to act under a full perſuaſion of this great article. Rogers.

I'NFINITENESS. n. ſ. [from infinite.] Immenſity; boundleſſneſs; infinity.

The cunning of his flattery, the readineſs of his tears, the infiniteneſs of his vows, were but among the weakeſt threads of his net. South.

Let us always bear about us ſuch impreſſions of reverence, and fear of God, that we may humble ourſelves before his Almightineſs, and expreſs that infinite diſtance between his infiniteneſs and our weakneſſes. Taylor.

INFINITE'SIMAL. adj. [from infinite.] Infinitely divided.

INFI'NITIVE. adj. [infinitif, Fr. infinitivus, Latin.] In grammar, the infinitive affirms, or intimates the intention of affirming, which is one uſe of the indicative, but then it does not do it abſolutely. Clarke's Lat Gram.

INFI'NITUDE. n. ſ. [from infinite.]

1. Infinity; immenſity.

Confuſion heard his voice, and wild uproar
Stood rul'd, ſtood vaſt infinitude confin'd. Milt. Par. Loſt

Though the repugnancy of infinitude be equally incompetible to continued or ſucceſſive motion, or continued quantity, and depends upon the incompoſſibility of the very nature of things ſucceſſive or extenſive with infinitude, yet that incompoſſibility is more conſpicuous in diſcrete quantity, that ariſeth from parts actually diſtinguiſhed. Hale.

2. Boundleſs number.

We ſee all the good ſenſe of the age cut out, and reduced into almoſt an infinitude of diſtinctions. South's Sermons.

INFI'NITY. n. ſ. [infinité, French; infinitas, Latin.]

1. Immenſity; boundleſſneſs; unlimited qualities.

There cannot be more infinities than one; for one of them would limit the other. Raleigh's Hiſt of the World.

The better, the more deſirable; that therefore muſt be deſirable, wherein there is infinity of goodneſs; ſo that if any thing deſirable may be infinite, that muſt needs be the higheſt of all things that are deſired: no good is infinite but only God, therefore he our felicity and bliſs. Hooker.

2. Endleſs number. An hyperbolical uſe of the word.

Homer has concealed faults under an infinity of admirable beauties. Broome's Notes on the Odyſſey.

The liver, being ſwelled, compreſſeth the ſtomach, ſtops the circulation of the juices, and produceth an infinity of bad ſymptoms. Arbuthnot on Diet.

INFIRM. adj. [infirme, French; infirmus, Latin.]

1. Weak; feeble, diſabled of body.

Here ſtand I your brave,
A poor, infirm, weak, and deſpis'd old man. Shakeſp.

To INOCULATE. v. a. [inoculo, Lat.]

1. To propagate any plant by inserting its bud into another stock; to practise inoculation. See INOCULATION.

Nor are the ways alike in all.
How to engraff, how to inoculate. May's Virg. Georg.

Now is the season for the budding of the orange-tree: inoculate therefore at the commencement of this month. Evelyn.

But various are the ways to change the state,
To plant, to bud, to graft, to inoculate. Dryden.

2. To yield a bud to another stock.

Virtue cannot so inoculate our old stock, but we shall relish of it. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Thy stock is too much out of date,
For tender plants t' inoculate. Cleaveland.

Where flies, in a lovely brown,

INOCULA'TION. n. s. [inoculatio, Lat. from inoculate.]

1. Inoculation is practised upon all sorts of stone-fruit, and upon oranges and jasmines. In order to perform it, be provided with a sharp pen-knife, having a flat haft, and some bass-mat. Having taken off the cuttings from the trees you would propagate, chuse a smooth part of the stock; then with your knife make an horizontal cut cross the rind of the stock, and from the middle of that cut make a slit downwards about two inches in length in the form of a T; but be careful not to cut too deep, lest you wound the stock: then having cut off the leaf from the bud, leaving the foot-stalk remaining, make a cross cut about half an inch below the eye, and with your knife slit off the bud, with part of the wood to it. This done, with your knife pull off that part of the wood which was taken with the bud, observing whether the eye of the bud be left to it or not, for all these buds which lose their eyes in stripping are good for nothing. then raising the bark of the stock with the flat haft of your pen-knife clear to the wood, thrust the bud therein, placing it smooth between the rind and the wood of the stock, cutting off any part of the rind belonging to the bud which may be too long, and so having exactly fitted the bud to the stock, tie them closely round with bass-mat, beginning at the under part of the slit, and so proceed to the top, taking care not to bind round the eye of the bud. The March following cut off the stock three inches above the bud, sloping it, that the wet may pass off: to this part of the stock, above the bud, fasten the shoot which proceeds from the bud, and which would be in danger of being blown out, but this must continue no longer than one year, after which it must be cut off close above the bud, that the stock may be covered thereby. Miller.

In the stem of Eleanor they all met, and came to be ingrafted all upon one stock, most of them by inoculation. Howel.

2. The practice of transplanting the small-pox, by infusion of the matter from ripened pustules into the veins of the unaffected, in hopes of procuring a milder sort than what frequently comes by infection.

It is evident, by inoculation, that the smallest quantity of the matter, mixed with the blood, produceth the disease [illegible]

INOCULA'TOR. n. s. [from inoculate.]

1. One that practises the inoculation of trees.

2. One who propagates the small-pox by inoculation.

The Supreme Infinite could not make intelligent creatures, without implanting in their natures a most ardent desire, interwoven in the substance of their spiritual natures, of being reunited with himself. Cheyne's Phil. Principles.

I do not altogether disapprove the interweaving texts of scripture through the style of your sermon. Swift's Miscel.

To INTERWI'SH. v. a. [inter and wish.] To wish mutually to each other.

The venom of all stepdames, gamester's gall,
What tyrants and their subjects interwish,
All ill fall on that man. Donne.

INTE'STABLE. adj. [intestabilis, Latin.] Disqualified to make a will.

A person excommunicated is rendered infamous and intestable both actively and passively. Ayliffe's Parergon.

INTE'STATE. adj. [intestat, Fr. intestatus, Latin.] Wanting a will; dying without a will.

Why should calamity be full of words?
—Windy attorneys to their client woes,
Airy succeeders of intestate joys,
Poor breathing orators of miseries. Shakesp. Richard III.

Present punishment pursues his maw,
When surfeited and swell'd, the peacock raw,
He bears into the bath; whence want of breath,
Repletions, apoplex, intestate death. Dryden's Juvenal.

INTE'STINAL. adj. [intestinal, Fr. from intestine.] Belonging to the guts.

The mouths of the lacteals are opened by the intestinal tube, affecting a straight instead of a spiral cylinder. Arbuth.

INTE'STINE. adj. [intestin, Fr. intestinus, Latin.]

1. Internal; inward; not external.

Of these inward and intestine enemies to prayer, there are our past sins to wound us, our present cares to distract us, our distempered passions to disorder us, and a whole swarm of loose and floating imaginations to molest us. Duppa.

Intestine war no more our passions wage,
Ev'n giddy factions hear away their rage. Pope.

2. Contained in the body.

Intestine stone, and ulcer, cholick pangs,
And moon-struck madness. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.

A wooden jack, which had almost
Lost, by disuse, the art to roast,
A sudden alteration feels,
Increas'd by new intestine wheels. Swift's Miscel.

3. Domestick, not foreign. I know not whether the word be properly used in the following example of Shakespeare: perhaps a lot mortal and intestine should be read for internecine.

Since the mortal and intestine jars
'Twixt thy seditious countrymen and us,
It hath in solemn synods been decreed,
T' admit no traffick to our adverse towns. Shakespeare.

But God, or Nature, while they thus contend,
To these intestine discords put an end. Dryden's Ovid.

She saw her sons with purple deaths expire,
A dreadful series of intestine wars,
Inglorious triumphs, and dishonest scars. Pope.

INTE'STINE. n. s. [intestinum, Lat. intestine, Fr.] The gut; the bowel: most commonly without a singular.

The intestines or guts may be inflamed by an acrid substance taken inwardly. Arbuthnot on Diet.

To INTHRALL. v. a. [in and thrall.] To enslave; to shackle; to reduce to servitude. A word now seldom used, at least in prose.

What though I be inthrall'd, he seems a knight,
And will not any way dishonour me. Shakesp. Henry VI.

The Turk has fought to extinguish the ancient memory of those people which he has subjected and inthrall'd. Raleigh.

Authors to themselves in all
Both what they judge, and what they choose; for so
I form'd them free, and free they must remain
Till they inthrall themselves. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.

She soothes, but never can inthrall my mind.
Why may not peace and love for once be join'd. Prior.

INTHRA'LMENT. n. s. [from inthrall.] Servitude; slavery.

Moses and Aaron, sent from God to claim
His people from inthralment, they return
With glory, and spoil, back to their promis'd land. Milton's Par. Lost

To INTHRONE. v. a. [in and throne.] To raise to royalty; to seat on a throne.

One, chief, in gracious dignity inthroned,
Shines o'er the rest. Thomson's Summer, l. 395.

It is in our power to confine our friendships and intimacies to men of virtue. Rogers's Sermons.

INTIMATE adj. [intimado, Spanish; intimus, Lat.]

1. Inmost; inward; intestine.

They knew not
That what I mention'd was of God, I knew
From intimate impulse, and therefore urged on
The marriage. Addison's Against. I. 221.

Fear being so intimate to our natures, it is the strongest bond of laws. Tillotson's Sermons.

2. Near; not kept at distance.

Moses was with him in the retirements of the mount, received there his private instructions, and when the multitude were thundered away from any approach, he was honoured with his intimate and admitted access. South's Sermons.

Familiar; closely acquainted

United by this sympathetick bond,
You grow familiar, intimate, and fond Roscommon.

INTIMATE. n. f. [intimado, Spanish, intime, French; intimus, Latin.] A familiar friend; one who is trusted with our thoughts.

The design was to entertain his reason with a more equal converse, assign him an intimate whose intellect as much corresponded with his as did the outward form. Gov. Tongue

To INTIMATE v. a. [intimer, French, intimare, low Latin.] To hint; to point out indirectly, or not very plainly

Alexander Van Suchten tells us, that by a way he intimates, may be made a mercury of copper, not of the silver colour of other mercuries, but green. Boyle.

[illegible] eas and substances, with the abstract [illegible], intimate some real existence, from [illegible] their original pattern. Locke

'Tis the divinity that stirs within us;
'Tis heav'n itself that points out an hereafter,
And intimates eternity to man. Addison's Cato.

INTIMATELY adv. [from intimate.]

1. Closely, with intermixture of parts.

The same oeconomy is observed in the circulation of the chyle with the blood, by mixing it intimately with the parts of the fluid to which it is to be alimentated. Arbuthnot.

2. Nearly, inseparably

Quality, as it regards the mind, has its rise from knowledge and virtue, and is that which is more essential to us, and more intimately united with us. Addison's Spect. N°. 219.

3. Familiarly; with close friendship.

INTIMATION. n. f. [intimation, Fr. from intimate.] Hint; obscure or indirect declaration or direction.

Let him strictly observe the first stirrings and intimations; the first hints and whispers of good and evil that pass in his heart South's Sermons.

Of those that are only probable we have some reasonable intimations, but not a demonstrative certainty. Woodward.

Besides the more solid parts of learning, there are several little intimations to be met with on medals. Addison.

INTIME adj. Inward; being within the mass; not being external, or on the surface; internal.

As to the composition or dissolution of mixed bodies, which is the chief work of elements, and requires an intime application of the agents, water hath the principality and excels over earth. Digby on Bodies

To INTIMIDATE. v. a. [intimider, French; in and timidus, Lat.] To make fearful, to dastardize; to make cowardly.

Now guilt once harbour'd in the conscious breast,
Intimidates the brave, degrades the great. Irene.

INTIRE. n. f. [integer, Lat. entier, French; better written entire, which see, and all its derivatives] Whole; undiminished, broken.

The lawful power of making laws, to command whole politick societies of men, belongeth so properly unto the intire societies, that for any prince to exercise the same of himself, and not either by express commission immediately and personally received from God, or else by authority derived at the first from their consent upon whose persons he imposes laws, it is no better than mere tyranny. Hooker

INTI'RENESS n. f [from intire; better entireness.] Wholeness, integrity.

So shall all times find me the same
You this intireness better may fulfil,
Who have the pattern with you still. Donne.

INTO. prep. [in and to.]

1. Noting entrance with regard to place.

If iron will acquire by mere continuance an habitual inclination to the site it held, how much more may education, being a constant plight and moulding, induce by custom good habits into a reasonable creature. Watts

To give life to that which has yet no being, is to frame a living creature, fashion the parts, and having fitted them together, to put into them a living soul. Locke.

Water introduces into vegetables the matter it bears along with it. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

Acrid substances, which pass into the capillary tubes, must irritate them into greater contraction. Arbuthnot on Aliments

2. Noting penetration beyond the outside, or some action which reaches beyond the superficies or open part.

To look into letters already opened or dropt is held an ungenerous act. Pope.

3. Noting a new state to which any thing is brought by the agency of a cause.

They have denominated some herbs solar and some lunar, and such like toys put into great words. Boyle.

Compound bodies may be resolved into other substances than such as they are divided into by the fire. Boyle.

A man must sin himself into a love of other mens sins a bare notion of this black art will not carry him so far. South

Sure thou art born to some peculiar fate,
When the mad people rise against the state,
To look them into duty, and command
An awful silence with thy lifted hand. Dryden's Pref.

It concerns every man that would not trifle away his soul, and fool himself into irrecoverable misery, with the greatest seriousness to enquire into these matters. Tillotson

He is not a frail being, that he should be tired into compliance by the force of assiduous application. Smalridge.

In hollow bottoms, if any fountains chance to rise, they naturally spread themselves into lakes, before they can find any issue. Addison on Italy.

It would have been all irretrievably lost, was it not by this [illegible] and

Why are these positions charged upon me as their sole author; and the reader led into a belief, that they were never before maintained by any person of virtue. Atterbury.

It is no ways congruous, that God should be always frightening and astonishing men into an acknowledgement of the truth, who were made to be wrought upon by calm evidence. Atterbury's Sermons

A man may whore and drink himself into atheism, but it is impossible he should think himself into it. Bentley.

INTO'LERABLE. adj. [intolerabilis, Lat. intolerable, Fr.]

1. Insufferable; not to be endured, not to be borne; having any quality in a degree too powerful to be endured

If we bring into one day's thoughts the evil of many, certain and uncertain, what will be and what will never be, our load will be as intolerable as it is unreasonable. Taylor.

His awful presence did the crowd surprise,
Nor durst the rash spectator meet his eyes,
But [illegible] cor[illegible]
So fierce, they flash'd intolerable day Dryden

Some men are quickly weary of one thing: the same study long continued proves as intolerable to them, as the appearing long in the same clothes is to a court lady Locke.

From Paran's top th' Almighty rode,
Intolerable day proclaim'd the God. Broome.

2. Bad beyond sufferance.

Harmonick twang. Pope's Dunciad, b. ii

To INTO'RT v. a [intortus, Lat.] To twist, to wreath, to [illegible]

The brain is a congeries of glands, that separate the finer parts of the blood, called animal spirits, and a gland is nothing but a canal variously intorted and wound up together Arbuth.

With rev'rent hand the king presents the gold,
Which round th' intorted horns the gilder roll'd. Pope.

To INTOXICATE. v. a. [in and toxicum, Latin.] To inebriate, to make drunk.

The more a man drinketh of the world, the more it intoxicateth, and age doth profit rather in the powers of understanding than in the virtues of the will and affections. Bacon.

As with new wine intoxicated both,
They swim in mirth, and fancy that they feel
Divinity within them breeding wings,
Wherewith to scorn the earth Milton's Par. Loft, b. ix.

My early mistress, now my ancient muse,
That strong Circean liquor cease t' infuse,
Wherewith thou didst intoxicate my youth. Denham

What part of wild fury was there in the bacchanals which we have not seen equall'd, if not exceeded by some intoxicated zealots? Decay of Piety.

Others, after having done fine things, yet spoil them by endeavouring to make them better; and are so intoxicated with an earnest desire of being above all others, that they suffer themselves to be deceived Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Vegetables by fermentation are wrought up to spirituous liquors, having quite different qualities from the plant itself, for no fruit taken crude has the intoxicating quality of wine. Arbuthnot

INTOXICA'TION. n. f. [from intoxicate.] Inebriation; ebriety; the act of making drunk; the state of being drunk.

That king, being in amity with him, did so burn in hatred towards him, as to drink of the lees and dregs of Perkin's intoxication, who was every where else detected. Bacon.

Whence can this proceed, but from that besotting intoxication which verbal magick brings upon the mind. South.

INTRA'CTABLE. n. f. [intractabilis, Lat. intraitable, Fr.]

1. Ungovernable, violent, stubborn; obstinate

To love them who loves us is so natural a passion, that even the most intractable tempers obey its force. Rogers.

INTRANQUI'LITY. n. f. [in and tranquility.] Unquietness; want of rest.

Jactations were used for amusement, and allay in constant pains, and to relieve that intranquility which makes men impatient of lying in their beds. Temple.

INTRA'NSITIVE. v. n. [intransitivus, Latin.] [In grammar.] A verb intransitive is that which signifies an action, not conceived as having an effect upon any object, as, curro, I run. Clarke's Lat. Gram.

INTRANSMU'TABLE. adj. [in and transmutable.] Unchangeable to any other substance.

Some of the most experienced chemists do affirm quicksilver to be intransmutable, and therefore call it liquor aeternus. Ray on the Creation.

To INTREASURE. v. a. [in and treasure.] To lay up as in a treasury.

There is a history in all mens lives,
Figuring the nature of the times deceas'd;
The which observ'd, a man may prophesy,
With a near aim, of the main chance of things
As yet not come to life, which in their seeds
And weak beginnings lie intreasured Shakesp. Henry IV.

To INTRENCH. v. a. [in and trancher, French.]

1. To invade, to encroach; to cut off part of what belongs to another

Little I desire my sceptre should intrench on God's sovereignty, which is the only king of men's consciences. K. Charles.

That crawling insect, who from mud began,
Warm'd by my beams, and kindled into man!
Durst he, who does but for my pleasure live,
Intrench on love, my great prerogative. Dryden's Aureng.

We are not to intrench upon truth in any conversation, but least of all with children. Locke.

2. To break with hollows.

His face
Deep scars of thunder had intrench'd, and care
Sat on his faded cheek. Milton's Par. Lost, b. i.

3. To fortify with a trench: as, the allies were intrenched in their camp.

INTRENCHANT. adj. [This word, which is, I believe, found only in Shakespeare, is thus explained by one of his editors: The intrenchant air means the air which suddenly encroaches and closes upon the space left by any body which had passed through it. Hanmer. I believe Shakespeare intended rather to express the idea of indivisibility or invulnerableness, and derived intrenchant, from in privative, and trencher, to cut, intrenchant is indeed properly not cutting, rather than not to be cut; but this is not the only instance in which Shakespeare confounds words of active and passive signification.] Not to be divided; not to be wounded; [illegible]

As easy may'st thou the intrenchant air
With thy keen sword impress, as make me bleed. Shakesp.

INTRE'NCHMENT. n. f. [from intrench.] Fortification with a trench.

Of sulphurous war, on Temers dreadful field. Thomson.

INTREPI'DITY. n. f. [intrepidité, Fr.] Fearlessness; courage; [illegible]

I could not sufficiently wonder at the intrepidity of these diminutive mortals, who durst venture to walk upon my body, without trembling. Gulliver's Travels

INTRE'PIDLY. adv. [from intrepid.] Fearlessly; boldly; 'dar-[illegible]ly.

He takes the globe for the scene; he launches forward intrepidly, like one to whom no place is new. Pope.

INTRICACY. n. f. [from intricate.] State of being entangled, perplexity; involution, complication of facts or notions

The part of Ulysses in Homer's Odyssey is much admired by Aristotle, as perplexing that fable with very agreeable plots and intricacies, by the many adventures in his voyage, and the subtilty of his behaviour. Addison.

INTRICATE. adj. [intricatus, Lat.] Entangled, perplexed; involved, complicated; obscure.

Much of that we are to speak may seem to a number perhaps tedious, perhaps obscure, dark, and intricate Howel.

His style in writing was fit to convey the most intricate business to the understanding with the utmost clearness. Addison.

To INTRICATE. [from the adjective.] To perplex; to darken. Not proper, nor in use.

Alterations of surnames have so intricated, or rather obscured, the truth of our pedigrees, that it will be no little hard labour to deduce them. Camden.

INTRICATELY. adv. [from intricate.] With involution of one in another; with perplexity

That variety of factions, into which we are so intricately engaged, gave occasion to this discourse. Swift

He found such intricateness, that he could see no way to lead him out of the maze. Sidney.

INTRIGUE. n. f. [intrigue, French.]

1. A plot; a private transaction in which many parties are engaged; usually an affair of love.

These are the grand intrigues of man,
These his huge thoughts, and these his vast desires. Fiatman.

A young fellow long made love, with much artifice and intrigue, to a rich widow. Addison's Guard

The hero of a comedy is represented victorious in all his intrigues. Swift.

Now love is dwindled to intrigue,
And marriage grown a money league. Swift's Miscel.

2. Intricacy; complication. Little in use.

Though the vicinity of ourselves to ourselves cannot give us the full prospect of all the intrigues of our nature, yet we have much more advantage to know ourselves, than to know other things without us. Hale's Original of Mankind.

3. The complication or perplexity of a fable or poem; artful involution of feigned transaction

As these causes are the beginning of the action, the opposite designs against that of the hero are the middle of it, and form that difficulty or intrigue which makes up the greatest part of the poem. Pope.

To INTRI'GUE. v. n. [intriguer, Fr. from the noun.] To form plots; to carry on private designs.

INTRI'GUER. n. f. [intriguer, Fr. from intrigue.] One who busies himself in private transactions, one who forms plots; one who pursues women.

Thy muſe too long ſlumbereth in ſorrowing,
Lulled aſleep through love's miſgovernance. Spenſer.

JO'URNAL. adj [journale, French; giornale, Italian.] Daily; quotidian. Out of uſe.

Now 'gan the golden Phœbus for to ſteep
His fiery face in billows of the Weſt,
And his faint ſteeds water'd in ocean deep,
Whilſt from their journal labours they did reſt. Fa. Queen.
Ere twice the ſun has made his journal greeting
To th' under generation, you ſhall find
Your ſafety manifeſted. Shakeſ. Meaſ. for Meaſure.
So ſick I am not, yet I am not well;
But not ſo citizen a wanton, as
To ſeem to die ere ſick; ſo, pleaſe you, leave me:
Stick to your journal courſe; the breach of cuſtom
Is breach of all. Shakeſpeare's Cymbeline.

JOURNAL n. ſ. [journe, French, giornale, Italian.]

Like hounds ill-coupled jowler lags him ſtill
[illegible] ! Dryden.

JO'WTER. n. ſ. [perhaps corrupted from jolter.]

Plenty of fiſh is vented to the fiſh drivers, whom we call jowters. Carew.

JOY. n. ſ. [joye, French; gioia, Italian.]

1. The paſſion produced by any happy accident; gladneſs, exultation.

Joy is a delight of the mind, from the conſideration of the preſent, or aſſured approaching poſſeſſion of a good. Locke.

There appears much joy in him; even ſo much, that joy could not ſhow itſelf enough without a badge of bitterneſs [illegible]

There ſhould not be ſuch heavineſs in their deſtruction, as ſhall be joy over them that are perſuaded to ſalvation. 2 Eſdr.

The lightſome paſſion of joy was not that trivial, vaniſhing, ſuperficial thing, that only gilds the apprehenſion, and plays upon the ſurface of the ſoul. South's Sermons

2. Gaiety; merriment, feſtivity.

The roofs with joy reſound,
And hymen, to hymen, rung around. Dryden.

3. Happineſs; felicity.

My lord Baſſanio, and my gentle lady,
I wiſh you all the joy that you can wiſh.
Come, love and health to all,
Then I'll ſit down give me ſome wine drink to the general joy of the whole table. Shakeſp.

Almeyda ſmiling came,
Attended with a train of all her race,
Whom in the rage of empire I had murder'd;
But now, no longer foes, they gave me joy
Of my new conqueſt Dryden's Don Sebaſtian.

The bride,
Lovely herſelf, and lovely by her ſide,
A bevy of bright nymphs, with ſober grace,
Came glitt'ring like a ſtar, and took her place
Her heav'nly form beheld, all wiſh'd her joy,
And little wanted, but in vain, their wiſhes all employ Dry.

4. A term of fondneſs.

Now our joy,
Although our laſt, yet not our leaſt young love,
What ſay you? Shakeſ. King Lear.

To JOY. v. a. [from the noun.] To rejoice; to be glad, to [illegible]

Sometimes I joy, when glad occaſion fits,
And maſk in mirth like to a comedy;
Soon after, when my joy to ſorrow flits,
I will make my woes a tragedy Spenſer

I cannot joy, until I be reſolv'd
Where our right valiant father is become. Shakeſ. H VI.

He will joy over thee with ſinging. Zeph. iii. 17.

I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my ſalvation. Hab. iii. 18.

Exceedingly the more joyed we for the joy of Titus, becauſe [illegible] ſpirit was refreſhed [illegible] 2 Cor. vii. 13.

They laugh, we weep; they joy while we lament. Fairf.

No man imparteth his joys to his friend, but he joyeth the more; and no man imparteth his griefs, but he grieveth the leſs. Bacon's Eſſays.

Well then, my ſoul, joy in the midſt of pain;
Thy Chriſt, that conquer'd hell, ſhall from above
With greater triumph yet return again,
And conquer his own juſtice with his love. Wotton.

Joy thou,
In what he gives to thee this paradiſe,
And thy fair Eve. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. viii.

Their chearful age with honour youth attends,
Joy'd that from pleaſure's ſlav'ry they are free. Denham.

To JOY. v. a.

1. To congratulate; to entertain kindly.

Like us they love or hate, like us they know
To joy the friend, or grapple with the foe. Pope.

2. To gladden; to exhilarate.

She went to Pamela, meaning to delight her eyes and joy her thoughts with the converſation of her beloved ſiſter. Sidney.

My ſoul was joy'd in vain;
For angry Neptune rouz'd the raging main. Pope.

3. [Jouir de, French.] To enjoy, to have happy poſſeſſion

Let us hence,
And let her joy her raven-colour'd love. Shakeſp. Tit. Andr

I might have liv'd, and joy'd immortal bliſs,
Yet willingly choſe rather death with thee. Milton.

Th' uſurper joy'd not long
His ill-got crown. Dryden's Spaniſh Fryar.

JOYA'NCE. n. ſ. [joiant, old French.] Gaiety, feſtivity.

Bring home with you the glory of her gain,
With joyance bring her, and with jollity. Spenſer.

There him reſts in riotous ſuffiſance,
Of all his gladſomeneſs and kingly joyance. Spenſer.

JO'YFUL. adj. [joy and full]

My ſoul ſhall be joyful in my God. Iſ. lxi. 10.

2. Sometimes it has of before the cauſe of joy.

Six brave companions from each ſhip we loſt
With ſails outſpread we fly th' unequal ſtrife,
Sad for their loſs, but joyful of our life. Pope's Odyſſey.

JO'YFULLY. adj. [from joyful.] With joy; gladly.

If we no more meet 'till we meet in heav'n,
Then joyfully, my noble lord of Bedford,
And my kind kinſmen, warriours all, adieu. Shakeſp. H. V

Never did men more joyfully obey,
Or ſooner underſtood the ſign to ſlie
With ſuch alacrity they bore away,
As if to praiſe them all the ſtates ſtood by. Dryden.

The good Chriſtian conſiders pains only as neceſſary paſſages to a glorious immortality; that, through this dark ſcene of fancied horror, ſees a crown and a throne, and everlaſting bleſſings prepared for him, joyfully receives his ſummons, as he has long impatiently expected it. Watts.

JO'YFULNESS. n. ſ. [from joyful] Gladneſs, joy.

Thou ſerveſt not the Lord thy God with joyfulneſs, and with gladneſs of heart, for the abundance of all things Deutr

JO'YLESS. adj. [from joy]

1. Void of joy; feeling no pleaſure

A little joy enjoys the queen thereof,
For I am ſhe, and altogether joyleſs. Shakeſp R. III.

With down-caſt eyes the joyleſs victor ſat,
Revolving in his alter'd ſoul
The various turns of chance below,
And now and then a ſigh he ſtole,
And tears began to flow. Dryd. Alexander's Feaſt.

2. It has ſometimes of before the object.
With two ſad eyes his miſtreſs burns her breaſt,
He looks and languiſhes, and leaves his reſt
Forſakes his food, and, pining for the laſs,
Is joyleſs of the grove, and ſpurns the growing graſs. Dryd.

3. Giving no pleaſure.
A joyleſs, diſmal, black, and ſorrowful iſſue:
Here is the babe, as loathſome as a toad. Shakeſp. Tit. And.
Here love his golden ſhafts employs, here lights
His conſtant lamp, and waves his purple wings;
Reigns here, and revels not in the bought ſmiles
Of harlots, loveleſs, joyleſs, unendear'd,
Caſual fruition. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.
The pure in heart ſhall ſee God; and if any others could ſo invade this their incloſure, as to take heaven by violence, it ſurely would be a very joyleſs poſſeſſion. Decay of Piety.
He forgets his ſleep, and loaths his food,
That youth, and health, and war are joyleſs to him. Addiſon.

JO'YOUS. adj. [joyeux, French.]

1. Glad; gay; merry.
Moſt joyous man, on whom the ſhining ſun
Did ſhew his face, myſelf I did eſteem,
And that my ſelfer friend did no leſs joyous deem. Fa. Queen.
Joyous the birds; freſh gales and gentle airs
Whiſper'd it. Milton.
Then joyous birds frequent the lonely grove,
And beaſts, by nature ſtung, renew their love. Dryden.
Faſt by her flow'ry bank the ſons of Arcas,
Fav'rites of heav'n, with happy care protect
Their fleecy charge, and joyous drink her wave. Prior.

2. Giving joy.
They ſad as glad as birds of joyous prime,
Thence led her forth, about her dancing round. F. Queen.

3. It has of ſometimes before the cauſe of joy.
Round our death-bed ev'ry friend ſhould run,
And joyous of our conqueſt early won,
While the malicious world with envious tears
Should grudge our happy end, and wiſh it theirs. Dryden.

IPECACUA'NHA. n. ſ. [An Indian plant.]
Ipecacuanha is a ſmall irregularly contorted root, rough, denſe, and firm. One ſort is of a duſky greyiſh colour on the ſurface, and of a paler grey when broken, which is brought from Peru: the other ſort is a ſmaller root, reſembling the former; but it is of a deep duſky brown, or blackiſh colour on the outide, and white when broken, brought from the Braſils. The grey ought to be preferred in medicinal uſe, becauſe the brown, being ſtronger, is apt to operate more roughly. Ipecacuanha was in the middle of the laſt century firſt brought into Europe, and became celebrated for the cure of dyſenteries, a virtue diſcovered in it by the Indians; but after a few years it ſunk into oblivion, being given in two large doſes. Hiſt. Mat. Med.

IRA'SCIBLE. adj. [iraſcibilis, low Latin; iraſcible, French.] Partaking of the nature of anger.
The iraſcible paſſions follow the temper of the heart, and the concupiſcible diſtractions the craſis of the liver. Brown.
I know more than one inſtance of iraſcible paſſions ſubdued by a vegetable diet. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
We are here in the country ſurrounded with bleſſings and pleaſures, without any occaſion of exerciſing our iraſcible faculties. Digby to Pope.

IRE. n. ſ. [Fr. ira, Latin.] Anger; rage; paſſionate hatred.
She lik'd not his deſire;
Fain would be free, but dreaded parents ire. S. Ivy.
If I digg'd up thy forefathers graves,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It could not ſlake mine ire, nor eaſe my heart. Shak. H. VI.
Or Neptune's ire, or Juno's, that ſo long
Perplex'd the Greek and Cytherea's ſon. Milton's Par. Loſt.
The ſentence, from thy head remov'd, may light
On me, ſole cauſe to thee of all this woe,
Me! me! only juſt object of his ire. Milton's Parad. Loſt.
For this th' avenging pow'r employs his darts,
And empties all his quiver in our hearts,
Thus will perſiſt, relentleſs in his ire,
Till the fair ſlave be rendered to her ſire. Dryden.

IRE'FUL. adj. [ire and full.] Angry; raging; furious.
The ireful baſtard Orleans, that drew blood
From thee, my boy, I ſoon encounter'd. Shakeſ. H. VI.
By many hands your father was ſubdu'd,
But only ſlaughter'd by the ireful arm
Of unrelenting Clifford. Shakeſp. Henry VI.
There learn'd this maid of arms the ireful guiſe. Fairfax.
In midſt of all the dome misfortune ſat,
And gloomy diſcontent and fell debate,
And madneſs laughing in his ireful mood. Dryden.

IREFULLY. adv. [from ire.] With ire; in an angry manner.

IRIS. n. ſ. [Latin.]

Beſide the ſolary iris, which God ſhewed unto Noah, there is another lunary, whoſe efficient is the moon. Brown.

2. Any appearance of light reſembling the rainbow.
When both bows appeared more diſtinct, I meaſured the breadth of the interior iris 2 gr. 10′; and the breadth of the red, yellow, and green in the exterior iris, was to the breadth of the ſame colours in the interior 3 to 2. Newton's Opt.

3. The circle round the pupil of the eye.

4. The flower-de-luce.
Iris all hues, roſes and jeſſamine. Milton.

To IRK. v. a. [yrk, work, Shandick.] This word is uſed only imperſonally, it irks me; mihi pœnæ eſt, it gives me pain, or; I am weary of it. Thus the authors of the Accidence ſay, taedet, it irketh.
Come, ſhall we go and kill us veniſon?
And yet it irks me, the poor dappled fools
Should, in their own confines, with forked heads,
Have their round haunches gor'd. Shakeſpeare.
It irks his heart he cannot be reveng'd. Shakeſ. H. VI.

IRKSOME. adj. [from irk.] Weariſome; tedious; troubleſome; toilſome; tireſome; unpleaſing.
I know ſhe is an irkſome brawling ſcold. Shakeſpeare.
Since that thou can'ſt talk of love ſo well,
Thy company, which erſt was irkſome to me,
I will endure. Shak. As you like it.
Where he may likeſt find
Truce to his reſtleſs thoughts, and entertain
The irkſome hours, 'till his great chief return. Milton.
For not to irkſome toil, but to delight
He made us, and delight to reaſon join'd. Milton.
There is nothing ſo irkſome as general diſcourſes, eſpecially when they turn chiefly upon words. Addiſon's Spectator.
Frequent appeals from hence have been very irkſome to that illuſtrious body. Swift.

IRKSOMELY. adv. [from irkſome.] Weariſomely; tediouſly.

IRKSOMENESS. n. ſ. [from irkſome.] Tediouſneſs; wearineſs.

IRON. n. ſ. [hiarn, Welſh; ɨpenn, ɨpen, Saxon; iarn, Erſe.]

1. A metal common to all parts of the world, plentiful in moſt, and of a ſmall price, though ſuperior in real value to the deareſt. Though the ſpecific gravity of all metals, except tin, it is conſiderably the hardeſt; and, when pure, naturally malleable, but in a leſs degree than gold, ſilver, lead, or copper: when wrought into ſteel, or when in the impure ſtate from its firſt fuſion, in which it is called caſt iron, it is ſcarce malleable; and the moſt ductile iron, heated and ſuddenly quenched in cold water, loſes much of this quality. Iron is more capable of ruſt than any other metal, is very ſonorous, and requires the ſtrongeſt fire of all the metals to melt it, and is with difficulty amalgamated with mercury. Moſt of the other metals are brittle, while they are hot; but this is moſt malleable as it approaches neareſt to fuſion. It conſiſts of a vitriolick ſalt, a vitrifiable earth, and a peculiar bituminous matter. The ſpecifick gravity of iron is to water as 7632 is to 1000. It is the only known ſubſtance that is attracted by the loadſtone. Iron is not only ſoluble in all the ſtronger acids, but even in common water. Pure iron has been found in ſome places but very rarely; iron has greater medicinal virtues than any of the other metals. Hill.
Nor airleſs dungeon, nor ſtrong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the ſtrength of ſpirit. Shakeſp. Jul. Cæſ.
If he ſmite him with an inſtrument of iron, ſo that he die, he is a murderer. Num. xxxv. 16.
The power of drawing iron is one of the ideas of a loadſtone, and a power to be ſo drawn is a part of that of iron. Locke.
In a piece of iron ore, of a ferruginous colour, are ſeveral thin plates, placed parallel to each other. Woodward.
There are incredible quantities of iron ſtag in various parts of the foreſt of Dean. Woodward on Foſſils.
Iron ſtone lies in ſtrata. Woodward on Foſſils.
I treated of making iron work, and ſteel work in general. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

2. Any inſtrument or utenſil made of iron: as, a flat iron, box iron, or ſmoothing iron.
Irons of a doit, doublets that hangmen would
Bury with thoſe that wore them, theſe baſe ſlaves,
Ere yet the fight be done, pack up. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.
O Thou! whoſe captain I account myſelf,
Look on my forces with a gracious eye.
Put in their hands thy bruiſing irons of wrath,
That they may cruſh down with a heavy fall
Th' uſurping helmets of our adverſaries. Shak. R. III.
His feet they hurt with fetters: he was laid in irons. Pſ.
Can'ſt thou fill his ſkin with barbed irons, or his head with fiſh-ſpears? Job xli.
For this your locks in paper-durance bound?
For this with tort'ring irons wreath'd around? Pope.

3. Chain, ſhackle, manacle: as, he was put in irons.
The iron entered into his ſoul. Pſalms. Common Prayer.

Three vigorous virgins, waiting ſtill behind,
Aſſiſt the throne of th' iron ſcepter'd king. Craſhaw.

O ſad virgin, that thy power
Might bid the ſoul of Orpheus ſing
Such notes as warbled to the ſtring,
Drew iron tears from Pluto's cheek,
And made hell grant what love did ſeek. Milton.

In all my iron years of wars and dangers,
From blooming youth down to decaying age,
My fame ne'er knew a ſtain of diſhonour. Rowe.

Jove cruſh the nations with an iron rod,
And ev'ry monarch be the ſcourge of God. Pope's Odyſſey.

4. Indiſſoluble; unbroken.

Raſh Elpenor, in an evil hour,
Dry'd an immeaſurable bowl, and thought
T' exhale his ſurfeit by irriguous ſleep,
Imprudent. him death's iron ſleep oppreſt. Phillips.

5. Hard; impenetrable

I will converſe with iron witted fools,
And unreſpective boys: none are for me,
That look into me with conſid'rate eyes. Shakeſp. R. III.

To Iron. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To ſmooth with an iron
2. To ſhackle with irons

Iro'nical. adj [ironique, Fr. from irony.] Expreſſing one thing and meaning another; ſpeaking by contraries.

In this fallacy may be compriſed all ironical miſtakes, or expreſſions receiving inverted ſignifications. Brown.

I take all your ironical civilities in a literal ſenſe, and ſhall expect them to be literally performed. Swift.

Iro'nically. adv. [from ironical.] By the uſe of irony.

Socrates was pronounced by the oracle of Delphos to be the wiſeſt man of Greece, which he would turn from himſelf ironically, ſaying, there could be nothing in him to verify the oracle, except this, that he was not wiſe, and knew it; and others were not wiſe, and knew it not. Bacon.

The dean, ironically grave,
Still ſhunn'd the fool, and laſh'd the knave. Swift.

Iron-mo'nger. n. ſ. [iron and monger.] A dealer in iron

Iron-wood. n. ſ. A kind of wood extremely hard, and ſo ponderous as to ſink in water. It grows in America. Rob. Crufo.

Iron-wort. n. ſ. [ſideritis, Latin.] It is a plant with a labiated flower, conſiſting of one leaf, whoſe upper lip or beard is divided into three parts. out of the flower-cup riſes the pointal, attended, as it were, by four embryoes; which afterward turn to ſo many oblong ſeeds, ſhut up in an huſk, which before was the flower-cup: to theſe marks muſt be added, the flowers growing in whorles at the wings of the leaves, which are cut like a creſt, and differ from the other leaves of the plant. Mill.

Iron-y. adj. [from iron.] Made of iron, partaking of iron.

The force they are under is real, and that of their fate but imaginary: it is not ſtrange if the irony chains have more ſolidity than the contemplative. Hammond's Fundamentals.

Some ſprings of Hungary, highly impregnated with vitriolick ſalts, diſſolve the body of one metal, ſuppoſe iron, put into the ſpring; and depoſite, in lieu of the irony particles carried off, coppery particles. Woodward on Foſſils.

Iro'ny. n. ſ. [ironie, Fr. ἰρωνεία.] A mode of ſpeech in which the meaning is contrary to the words: as, Bolingbroke was a holy man.

So grave a body, upon ſo ſolemn an occaſion, ſhould not deal in irony, or explain their meaning by contraries. Swift.

Irra'diance. } n. ſ. [irradiance, French; irradio, Latin.]
Irra'diancy }
